She, (the Vidyā of absorption, the goddess) Grāsā (the Devouring One) who delights in the process of absorption (grāsīkaraṇa), is one divided by the seven. The Command of the (these) instruments (of mantra) is supreme pervasion and pervasion is the knowledge and action of the instruments (of mantra).[42] (48)

The instrument (of mantra) supresses impurity through the agency of the knowledge of the instrument (of mantra). When the instruments are one (the yogi realises the) Deity of the Cave of the Caves.[43] (49)

The Cave of the Supreme Goddess is the one (reality illumined) by the light of the Cave of the Yoni (guhyaguhā).[44] 1) The bliss of the cave, 2) the bliss of the energies (kalā), 3) the current of bliss, along with 4) the (the goddess's) Command, 5) knowledge (vijñāna), 6) nectar and 7) time are the seven (aspects) of the knowledge of the (Deity's) energies (kalāvijñāna). (50-51ab)

The goddesses are seven,[45] the energies are seven, the houses (gṛha) are seven[46] along with the scalpel (of the seed-syllables of the seven).[47] They expand on the seventh plane by the expansion of awakened consciousness.[48] (51cd-2ab)

(This) expansion is sevenfold bliss.[49] (It consists of) the rays of the aesthetic savour (āsvāda) of expansion. There are eight energies of the current of (these) rays. The eight (together constitute) the one supreme energy. The knowledge of the permutations (vikalavijñāna) of the energies is the process of manifestation (kalana) of the ocean of consciousness (jñānasāgara).[50] (52cd-53)

The power within the ocean (of the Yoni) is the great power known as the (goddess) Ṣaḍi (the Six). The Six is (this) group of six. The Six is the fivefold energy.[51] The Six is the ocean (of the Yoni). The Six is the measure (of energy) (mātrā).[52] The teaching concerning the measure is by means of the six. (54-55ab)

Śiva's Command is within Śiva and is the plane of Śiva's consciousness (vijñānabhūmikā), which is the thread of Śiva's energies. He is Śiva, the deity of the thirty-six. There are thirty-six divisions of the Six and Gesture is divided into thirty-six. The principle of pervasion (vyāptitattva) is the essential nature of the six and expands the group of six (energies) of awakened consciousness (bodhaṣaṭka).[53] (55cd-57ab)

(The goddess) Mudrā (Gesture) is within the jar (on the maṇḍala)[54] and she is seven in accord with the parts (of the maṇḍala) (prakārataḥ). The one (goddess) Gesture, who is the pervasion of the syllable (of the Triangle) in three parts (triprakāra),[55] pervades the universe. The Vidyā, illumined by the sixteen vowels, engenders the pervasion of the universe. (57cd-58)

Again, in accord with (her) desire, power resides within consciousness (vijñāna). This form of power (śaktibheda) (is such) because it is divided into three. Within the three that power is of three kinds; it has three qualities and is illumined by the syllable of the three qualities. There are three states of being in the process of expansion also, (wherein the goddess) Bhairavī of the bliss of expansion (resides). (59-60ab)

The Heroes who, by the Heroes' Path have been arisen in the Wheel of the Mothers, are the Siddhas and the Gestures of the Islands. (They are) first (and foremost) the Kula of the group of six, that is, the Kulakrama, the Vidyā and the tradition (anvaya) of the three Kulakramas.[56] (60cd-61)

The Eight Yoginīs

Khiṅkhinī

Bhairava's bliss[57] within the tradition (āmnāya)[58] is within the Wheel in the midst of the Mothers. The Mother who is in the middle of the Mothers is Khiṅkhiṇī, the Vidyā of the Mothers. (62)

Khiṅkhiṇī is of six kinds due to (her) varieties. This Gesture is Passion by nature (kāmarūpiṇī). She is the peak of sexual pleasure (ratiśekhara) of the group of Mothers of the Wheel of the Mothers. (63)

Kailāsa is at the summit of the peak and the Circle of the Mothers is within Kailāsa.[59] The union of the Mothers takes place in the sacred seat of Udyāna. (64)

One should desire the goddesses who reside there. They are the Seven Mothers[60] who should be (discerned and) differentiated (from one another) by means of the Scalpel of all the Mothers, that is, (the mantra) of the eight Yoginīs. (65)

She is the power who divides up (the parts) within the maṇḍala and is the Kaulikī Vidyā. Residing in the midst of the Kula, she is Kaulikī who brings about the expansion of the knowledge of the Kula. (66)

Ḍākinī – Nirodhinī

She becomes the Supreme Will (vāsanā) by the differentiation of the arising (of the energy of consciousness). The Māyā of the mind comes at the end of the Will and is encapsulated by the end of Māyā.[61] (67)

In its unified aspect (prakāra), it is Mind Beyond Mind at the end of the Will. This said to be the part (prakāra) (of the maṇḍala) and is sixfold. (68)

In this way, the Self is sixfold and is blocked (nirodhita) by the three qualities. Then the power which blocks (nirodhanī) is established as the Mother who is the letter Ḍa.[62] (69)

Rākinī – Ghaṇṭālakā

The dynamic state of Māyā is night and day (and resounds) constantly like a bell. Then the energy (called) Ghaṭālakā is said to be the letter Ra and the rest. (70)

Śākinī – Śāṅkarī

The letter Śa is (the energy present) in the oneness of arising and falling away and she is Śāṅkarī.[63] (71ab)

Lākinī – Ṣaṭkauśikā

Then (comes) the energy (called) Ṣaṭkauśikā (Six Sheaths) who is established as the letter La and the rest. (71cd)

Kākinī – Bhedakī

Then (that energy arises which) divides (bhedakī) the 'coming and going' (of energy from the transcendental Void and back to it) and is the supreme bliss of both. She is the power Bhedakī (the Divider),[64] who is established as the letter Ka and the rest. She awakens the six Gestures and her form is the bliss of (the maṇḍala) that consists of six (parts). Then that virgin bliss (ānandakaumarī) divides the parts and the rest (of the maṇḍala). (72-73)

Hākinī – Udghāṭanī

The vital breath is (located) between the anus and the sexual organ. Bhairava arises at the end of the vital breath. Then (she is the power) called Udghāṭanī (She Who Unlocks) that pervades within the letter Ha and the rest.[65] (74)

Yākinī – Raudrī

The mind is at the end of the pervasive one as is the threefold Māyā. Then she is Raudrī who consists of the three qualities and is established in the letter Ya and the rest. (75)

The power Bhagā (the goddess Yoni) is in the middle of the Yoni (bhaga).[66] In the middle of the Yoni (her) form is that of the Yoni (bhagākṛti). She is the power who is generated from the bliss of the Yoni and pervades the form of the Yoni.[67] (76)

(This is) 1) the condition of pervasion (vyāptibhāva), 2) the pervasion of the energies (kalāvyāpti) and 3) pervasion in the Void (kha): (thus pervasion is) of three sorts. Then (when that energy is in this way) threefold and fivefold on the path, then (that power) unfolds the Path. The Path (mārga) is the World of the Hexagram (ṣaṭkoṇabhuvana).[68] The Path is the Ball (golaka) of the Hexagram.[69] (77-78ab)

The Five Yoginīs

Ḍāmaryā

Ḍāmaryā, who is called the letter Ḍa, which is within the monastery (maṭha), is the mountain goddess of the field (kṣetrapārvatī). Situated within the belly of the Mountain,[70] she splits apart the Triangle of the (cosmic) Path (adhvan), once (she has) split apart her own Yoni that arouses (kṣobhakāraka) the mind.[71] (78cd-79)

Lākinī

Two Lions are within agency when the agency of the Lion who is (the universal) cause (is operant). The form of the abode of the letter La (is formed) by division into parts, two by two. The Self within the letter La is free of the plane of destruction (nirāsapada).[72] (80-81ab)

Śākinī – Raṇḍā

The power which is active bliss is the letter Sa, which is the Peak (śekhara) of the Stone (śilā). The (goddess) Raṇḍā (the Courtesan), who is between the Stone and the Peak, faces downwards.[73] By reversing (her she becomes) the Lion who is the letter Sa, which is called the Lion.[74] (81cd-82)

Hākinī – Haṁsinī

The power who is in the (Point which is the) womb of the Lotus[75] is Haṁsinī (the female Gander), the deity of Yoga. The syllable of the Command of the process of the maturation (of Karma) which is Yoga is the letter Ha. The power within the letter Ha is the Yoni (bhaga) which is the womb (udara) within the Gander.[76] (83-84ab)

Yākinī – Raudrī

Like the Yoni (bhaga), the Self is within Meru and, like the Yoni, the letter Ya is (Śiva) the Auspicious One. (84cd)

In this way, the wet (klinnā) power[77] has become fivefold in order to create. Such is the goddess Raudrī[78] who knows the divisions (within) the going and coming (of the energy of the goddess). (85)

Raudrī is Māyā. She is Vāmā who is gracious (suṣmaṇā) with nectar. She is Suṣumṇā who is said to be Jyeṣṭhā, while the one who shatters the abode of Jyeṣṭhā is called Bhañjanī (Hurricane), who resides in (Vāgbhava) the letter of the Yoni (bhagavarṇa).[79] (86-87ab)

She is merged within rajas and so (she is) the power of rajas that throws down (the ignorant). The elevation of one who has fallen is achieved by the best of Vidyās.[80] (87cd-88ab)

The six deities are the six petals of the six-petelled lotus. The supreme petal, which is at the end of the measures (mātrā) (of energies), is the Doomsday Fire (vāḍavīmukha). Then Yoga is said to be satisfaction and the yogi recollects Bhairava.[81] (87cd-89)

The form (mūrti) of Bhairava's sacred seat is the (energy which is the) valour Heroes possess. O sinless one, by applying the Conduct of Heroes (vīracaryā),[82] the Hero abides devoid of impurities. (90)

1) The upward expansion (utthāna) is the power Kaulikī and she is termed the letter Ū. 2) One should know that the middle (energy) is in the letter E (and that 3) the energy of) action is the letter E and Ū. 4) (The energy) that is above E and Ū is in (the sacred seat of) Tisra (where) 5) the Self which is (the letter) Ra has been encapsulated. 6) The letter AṀ is in the centre of the supreme and 7) the letter U is the sevenfold energy.[83] (91-92)

One should apply the sevenfold Yoga. The seven have the form of the world.[84] Form[85] and (its) mutation are seven. Then (one attains) the plane of the Skyfarer.[86] (93)

The maṇḍala within Khagīśa (the Lord of Skyfarers) is that of Khagīśa and it is in the middle of the Sky (of consciousness).[87] Having known his abode, encapsulated (in the Void) (one attains) the eternal plane. (94)

That energy straightens under the influence of the power (of consciousness) that has been penetrated (by mantra)[88] where the letter Ya, (associated with) the checking of the fluctuations of the mind, is established.[89] (95)

Then that state arises (which is attended by) shaking, possession, trembling, motion and pervasion of the plane (of ultimate reality). Thus (that) state is fivefold. (96)

(This) state is (that of the) emergence of the signs of attainment and this emergence is fivefold. The locus of impulse is in the letter Ya. Then (when its energy arises) the Kaula (reality) (kaulika) is aroused. (97)

Kaulīśa is called the Point and Sound of the emissions (visarga) of the Sound and the Point.[90] His seed (syllable) is that of Power and the power of the seed-syllable is threefold.[91] (98)

Then, because all the energies have dissolved away, he who sees the threefold god of all, the letter Ṭha,[92] (attains) the state (gati) of the Gander. (99)

In the womb (udara) of the World of the Gander[93] is the first energy and she is the fierce one (caṇḍā) called Amā, (the goddess) Umā who reveals awakened consciousness. (100)

It is the awakening of Kaula and, in its arising, it is the deity within the six. And the deity of the teachings of the Cave is also within the six in accord with the parts (of the maṇḍala) (prakārataḥ).[94] (101)

This is the (sixty-third) chapter which is the emergence of the transmission (kramodaya) with regards to the description of the Plane of the Hexad of the Command. It belongs to the primordial descent into the great sacrifice of the Churning Bhairava in the tradition (anvaya) that consists of seventy million (verses) that has emerged on the Path of Meru and (extends) for more than a hundred thousand quarter (verses). It is on the path of the Seat of Knowledge (vidyāpīṭha) and is the ultimate purport of the Subsequent Six Thousand (verses) of the Pure Division (vimalabhedottaraṣaṭka) in the division beginning with `KĀ' in the venerable scripture of twenty-four thousand (verses) (known as) the Svāminīmata of the Supreme Lord's command as uttered within the Tradition of the Mother (ambākrama).

CHAPTER SIXTY-FOUR

The Plane of the Pentad and the Triad

The venerable (goddess) Vakrā said:

The tradition concerning the plane (bhūmikā) (which is the inner meaning) of the Triad (trika) and the entire Pentad of the Pure (vimala) (mantras) will now be extolled. (1)

The Pure Pentad (vimalapañcaka)[1]

The repose[2] of the Pure Ones is the abode of the (five) instruments (of mantra) that have been (progressively) traversed (ākrānta).[3] (That) abode is the Pure One who is said to be fivefold. (2)

Their pure (vimalā) power is the aspect (bheda) that is called the Pure One. The transmission (krama) of the maṇḍala is pure by virtue of the division of the convention (referring to) the Pure One.[4] (3)

The maṇḍala is the Pure One (also). It is called the Pure Tree.[5] (Its power) is pure by virtue of the fivefold division. (4)

The Pure One is divided fivefold and (its) power is (similarly) fivefold. By virtue of the two categories (bheda),[6] the Supreme Soul is within the maṇḍala (vidhivigraha)[7] of the Yonis (bhaga). (5)

Anādivimala – the Pure One Without Beginning

By the beginningless and pure Command of the ones without beginning[8] and end the one called the Pure One is said to be five due to the the division of the pentad of the Command. (6)

Sarvajñavimala – The Omniscient Pure One

The Pure Self called 'Sa' is the omniscient one and the Summit which is the Moon (śaśiśekhara). The Summit is all things and the Self which is called the All.[9] (7)

The one who knows (the nature of) universal destruction illumines (prakāśaka) the rays of knowledge. The light (prakāśa) is pure bliss, the One-footed (E), the one whose flag is Fire (śikhidhvaja).[10] (8)

Power is the Flag (dhvajā) of the one whose flag is Fire. It is the nectar of the Flag which is the Umbrella of the Snake (ahichatra).[11] The one who is in the middle of the Flag (dhvaja) of the Banner (patāka) is the immortal Self of (all) living beings. (9)

The power of the Flag (dhvajāśakti) is in the centre of the Flag. She is Raudrī who is Mind beyond Mind. (This power), the Transmental (unmanā), along with (its) five divisions, is called the Omniscient.[12] (10)

1) Fire, 2) the Light of the digit of the Moon, 3) the Light, 4) the Peak of the Summit (śikharaśekhara), and 5) the Bliss of the Summit within the Summit - (thus) the Summit (śikhara) has become fivefold.[13] (11)

1) The fivefold Pervasion in the Summit, 2) the Path and 3) the Abode of the Summit, 4) the Abode, 5) the Form of Malaya - (this is) the Pentad of Malaya. (12)

The glorious power (vibhūti) which is the teaching of the Śaiva (scripture) is the reality (artha) experienced by the one who is the Pentad. The teaching is copious and, without end, it is free of defects and decay. (13)

Repose is the Bliss of Sport (ramaṇānanda). It is always free of fear and auspicious. Abandoning (the lower Wheels) by piercing (the Wheels through the upward motion of Kuṇḍalinī), the Teaching (manifests to) the awakened organs of the senses. (14)

By means of the boat of the Self (one attains) the repose[14] of the Summit and the Ocean of the Aeons. The Mind (manas) is the Bridge (that crosses over) the Ocean. It is the Bridge (setubandhaka)[15] over the series of energies (āvalī). (15)

By applying the three (groups of) five of both union and (its) termination then that group of five of the essence of the bliss of emanation (arises). (16)

The mark (lakṣa) is within the Three Horns of the fettered soul, the one without a mark (alakṣa), the dust and without dust - the Pure One belonging to the Five Nights is the act of nourishing (āpyāyana) all things. (17)

The Pure One of the Five Nights is the cage of the Five Nights. The Three Nights, the Void of the Four-footed - then he becomes enveloped (thus). (18)

Located within one's own body of the consciousness of mantra (mantrajñāna), it goes by the name the 'Lineage of the Tongue' (rasanāvali). Thus, due to the strength of the three enclosures, it is hard to know the power that is the greatest bondage. (19)

She is merged in all living being and in the mantras of unlimited vitality. She is the one Yoni, the will of Kula who is called the Pure Division. (20)

The five Peak (syllables), the five energies, the five letters of the seed-syllables, the Conjunction within Worship and the Beginningless - (this) is the Pentad. (21)

Both of the two (groups of) five pentads of the five (groups of) five pentads should be known to be the essence of mantra that renders (each) polarity (pakṣa) firm. (22)

The foundation of all the letters is extracted from the abode of (all) embodied beings. (As such it is) the extraction of the Hexad of Knowledge[16] conjoined with the five pentads. (23)

Bliss has become fivefold as the 1) Lord (deva) who is the indivisible divider (of the letters) of 2, 3) the powers pertaining to division and the divider, 4) Supreme Bliss and 5) the Bliss of Action. (24)

The supports, (the Mālinī order of the alphabet that) commences with Na and ends with Pha and the fourth part (pāda) in the middle (?) - when the three words are (united) equally in a unity, the Tree of the Parts is threefold.[17] (The essence of that is) the Void of the single syllable (Vidyā related to) Tūṣṇi, which is expansion, radiant with the flame (of its higher developments).[18] The pure (vimalā) power, which is said to arouse the insentient, is located there.[19] (25-26)

In this way Tūṣṇi is the supreme aggregate (of letters) (piṇḍa). The aggregate is the syllable of the single syllable (Vidyā) (AIṀ). (It is) the Bird in the middle of the polarities (of the breath). It is Tūṣṇi's maṇḍala consisting of three (letter) Has. Such, in brief, is the teaching concerning the pentad of the three letter Has. (27-28ab)

Six, along with seven, eight and nine (i.e. twenty four), conjoined with nine, eight and ten (i.e. twenty-seven) - the part (pada) (of the mantra is formed) from the part (uttered) in the reverse order where (the blissful and liberating) reverse action (viparītakriyā) (of Kuṇḍalinī takes place).[20] (28cd-29ab)

The parts (of the Vidyā) (pada) and the letters of the parts are five. (Along with them is another) part consisting of the letter of the single-syllabled (Vidyā). That one letter is the living being (jīva) conjoined with the energy of Emission (visargakalā).[21] (29cd-30ab)

(This is) the supreme, unconquered seed (syllable), the last and the first pentad. Free of the first pentad, in the centre it is adorned with the five.

The part (of the Vidyā) located in the five of the last pentad consists of twenty-five syllables. The five parts are the practice of the Krama (kramācāra). (They are the practice of) the left and the right. (The practice of) the right is the practice of the end (paścimācāra) and the end (paścima) is the dissolving away (of all things) completely.[22] (31cd-32)

The abode of merger is oneness and so (that) plane (of being) is said to be hard to understand. Everything being of five types, the end (paścima) has become fivefold. (33)

The five is indeed the fivefold aggregate (piṇḍa) (of the syllables), (the one on the) right has become fivefold. The preceding (pūrvaka) aggregate (of syllables) is (also) fivefold. Again, the aggregate (piṇḍaka) is fourfold. (34)

The fourfold path has been explained, that is, the Path of the Siddhas which is fourfold. (This is) the Kaula (reality consisting of the) bliss of one's own nature (which develops) by the expansion of the fourfold Command.[23] (35)

Udyāna

The bliss of Kula which is (both) Kula and Kaula[24] is Kulamātaṅga Bhairava. It is the ocean of all existing things (bhūta). Pervasive, it is the Great Garden (of the Liṅga).[25] (36)

The self (existing) Tree[26] that is there is divided into five branches. The group of five energies has arisen by the application of Sound and the Point.[27] (37)

(This is) the Tradition (anvaya), the primordial knowledge and sign of attainment (pratyaya) that has become fivefold and abides with five modalities (prakāra).[28] Once known, the Command (is transferred) in an instant. (38)

In the middle of the beginningless Stone is the Tree.[29] In the middle is the Kadamba (Tree). The Kadambinī Cave is liberation, the deity who has become fivefold. (39)

Pure and free from stain from the beginningless (past) (anādivimalā), (the deity) is called the letter E. Born at the front (agre) of the Triangle, she has descended onto the Himalayan mountain.[30] (40)

Jālandhara

Omniscient (sarvajñā), she is in the centre of the mountain[31] and bursts apart the letters U and Ū.[32] O god, she is born in the Convention of the Tortoise in the form of Jāla.[33] (41)

Pūrṇagiri

Rooted in Ā, she is the goddess of Yoga, whose seat (āsana) rests on the supreme body. She is merged into the northern (seat) and so she is the full one (pūrṇā) as Vimalā, the deity of Yoga. (42)

The Bhairavī of the letter of the Triangle is in the Void of the letters of the Siddha Liṅgas.[34] She is Śavarī of the Siddha Liṅgas and the Knot of Brahmā on the supreme plane (of existence).[35] (43)

The supreme bliss in tranquil (śamana) (state) is the plane of Ciñcinī when the expansion (of energy take place). The goddess Campakā arises established in the letter OṀ in order to accomplish (all things).[36] (44)

By the purification of (these) five sacred seats, the goddess (resides) in the sequence of the five fields as Śiva's bliss[37] and the mind (manas). Then the Pure Pentad (is fully formed). (45)

The Pure Pentad – the Five Conventions

The Gesture of Kiṅkiṇī, which is within all things, is the letter of Karavīra along with the letters of many forms (as) the Triad called the letter E. (46)

The head of Kha, the letter Kha, the head (of the letter) Ha and the letter Ha, the head of Ra, (the letter) at the beginning of Ha, the head (of the letter) Ja and the letter Ja, the pervasive bliss of the head of A - (this is) the Pentad of the five conventions. Having first learnt the pentad, the Pure One arises in a moment.[38] (47-48)

The one Stone of Kāmarūpa is Śivā, the Stone consisting of five syllables, there are five syllables and the parts (of the Vidyā) are five conjoined with the five Stones. (49)

Janmanī, who is in the middle of (the centre of) Birth is the Stone which is the energy that divides up (the letters). Beauty (kānti), which is the instrument (of mantra) of the letter E, is the Stone (along) with the radiant energy (varcas) of Brahmā.[39] (50)

Then generation of birth takes place in the syllable of the Triangle of Birth. The Stone of the western sacred seat is the Stone of Birth. (51)

O Bhava, that Stone is attained (only) after seven lifetimes (of spiritual endevour) have elapsed (and one attains liberation).[40] Wherever power resides fivefold it is bliss in the Circle of the Mothers. (52)

One should have the knowledge of all the treasure chest of mantras.[41] She is said to be the first Stone and this deity is the Yoginī. (53)

She is the one Birth-stone of Brahmā and is endowed with the Hexad of the Tree. The state of the five (seed-syllables) comes about after (that energy) has been (contemplated in this way and thus) churned. (54)

The Triad[42]

(Then) one attains the series (valli) of Mahendra, Harendra and Khagendra.[43] And that is the threefold means; then the triple (trika) division comes again. (55)

The entire circle of the sixteen vowels is the net of the energy of consciousness and the three letters are located there.[44] This is the teaching of the triad (trika). (56)

1) The letter Ā in the middle of 2) the letter A, and 3) the letter I, which is the abode of the qualities, along with the application of 4) (the letter) whose nature is Passion (surata) (is followed by) 5) the letter A, which is the supreme Ocean. (57)

(Then come) 6) the letter Ī, which is in the middle of 7) the letter S, and 8) the letter U, which are the three rays. The middle one is the deposition of the parts (pada) and the letter S, which is in the sphere of power. (58)

9) The syllable KU, (then) in the middle (comes) 10) the letter Ū, (followed) by 11-13) Vāgbhava (AIṀ), which is tripled. That is the unmanifest, the supreme Liṅga with A on its head and its sphere is pervasion. (59)

The Wheel is (thus) divided up by the thirteen and that Wheel is the teaching of the Point. Endowed with completely full energy, it consists of three groups of Heroes of the Assembly of Heroes (vīrarāśi). (60)

The three syllables of the Three Thorns and the thorns of the Three Thorns. The triple thorn is KAṬAMRA, RAKAṬĀTA and ṬHARAYU. (61)

It is called the convention of the triad which has also been extracted from the Ocean (of the Yoni full of letters). Extracted by the path of the left, the letter Ca is tripled.[45] (62)

The letter E of the letter Ca and the second one is at the end of the letter E. Then, (by adding) the double long (vowel) and differentiated bliss, there is success in the triad. (63)

Then, although one, having tripled, if the oneness of (the reality consisting of) the three qualities is the one Kula, then Bhairavī's form (mūrti) (is generated) from the instrument of (the state of) non-duality.[46] (64)

And (that state of) non-duality (advaita) is the Lord of the Stone, Ḍāmara Bhairava directly visible. He is the seed (syllable) of all living beings, the one, endless, body. (65)

The mental consciousness (cittacetana) of (this) stable seed (of mantra) is endless and without parts (niṣkala). It is the pervasive (deity the) Lion without parts, the image of the Lion that is both supreme (transcendent) and inferior (immanent). (66)

The luminosity of (that) radiant seed, which is both supreme (transcendent) and inferior (immanent) (parāpara) is the current of the expansion (prasara) of bliss. It is the Youth (kumara) (the destroyer of evil) who is both supreme and inferior. (67)

The seed (syllable) of desire, which is both supreme and inferior, is the desire of the supreme (transcendence) and inferior (immanance). The yogi established in Being attains the Triple Thorn (trikaṇṭaka) by means of the three.[47] (68)

Again, the Lord of the Stone, who is said to be the plane of the Brahman, is established in the (goddess) who abides as Nature (prakṛtibhūta). That is all the syllable of Brahman (extracted from the transcendent) (AIṂ) just as very distant water is drawn by the power of (good water) channels.[48] (69-70ab)

Lakula, the deity Viṣṇu, has the form of a creeper, like a lightning flash that plays (in a stormy sky). The seed (syllable) called Viṣṇu (ŚRĪṂ) is the Fire in the centre and its form is the Sun in the Sky. Subtle, it is in the centre of the Sun. Then Rudra (HRĪṂ) is clothed with the Void (digambara).[49] (70cd-71)

By abandoning confusion (āḍambara), the one in the middle is within the threefold Self. The Yoga of the Triad (trikayoga) is the western practice of the Krama (kramācāra) as its form is that of the left.[50] (72)

The left (vāma) is within the left and the end of the left that has been encapsulated with what is within the left. The path of that which is to be known arises once one has clearly known the two encapsulating halves (puṭadvaya). (73)

The sprout of Prajāpati, the Lord of Kula, is a ball of fire. The letter Sa of the word of the syllables of the Ball (is formed) from the tranquil nature. (74)

Once the mind has been concentrated, the intellect (becomes) stable and dissolves away. Then the Ocean of the Kaulas, which is the Kaula (reality) of the consciousness of Kula, (becomes manifest). (75)

[51]The Immortal and Lord of the Immortals that (has come) from the world of immortal knowledge and the light of all living beings is 1) the one living being (bhūta) who has become threefold. (76)

2) The triple weapon accomplished by 3) the three energies (kalā) and the accomplished power (siddhaśakti) should be threefold. 4) The deities of the Siddhas are three and 5) the Command of the triple division with the triple name (is also threefold). (77)

Again, 6) there is the Cave located on (the Triangle of) the three Preaks and 7) the three corners (of the Triangle). Her form is that of the bliss of 8) the three syllables, the Axis of Meru, and the lineage (santati) of 9) the three Yoginīs. (78)

The lineage (of the series of energies) is perpetual bliss and the lineage is uninterrupted. The power that has become free of fluctuations (nistaraṅgā) is the deity whose syllable is the letter Ku.[52] (79)

The goddess called Kumudā is within (Bhairava called the) Youth (kumara)[53] and within the Wind (of the vital breath). She is the young (yuvā) goddess of the winds (of the vital breaths). She is the goddess in this way in accord with Śiva's will. (80)

By (this) will she was first fashioned as Ghorā and as Aghorā from the ocean of knowledge. Her limbs are the waves of the waves of the ocean (and so she is) Taraṇgā (the Wave)[54] who resides in the Śiva principle. (81)

The power of the (supreme) principle (tattvaśakti) is the supreme will which is knowledge of the nature of consciousness. (She is) praised as the supreme fame (the energy) that blocks (obstacles) and disconnects (from bondage). (82)

Fame is (the goddess) Kātyāyanī,[55] the one deity of (all) the energies. (She is) Raktā (raktā) in the Kula of reversal (viparyaya),[56] the deity called Kujā. (83)

This deity is the goddess. She resides in the intellect and her name is Buddhi (Intellect). (She is) the power within the Kula of the coming and going (of the vital breath). She is split up. By recognizing her, the power who is the leader (nāyakī) of the divisions (of the energies), Anāmā, is considered to be Parā (Supreme). (84-85ab)

She is (the goddess Kubjikā) of the imperishable (reality) and is called Ku. (She is) the purifying (power) (śodhanī) of all the Siddhas. She is (the one) undifferentiated (niṣkala) (reality) who purifies the one who has previously produced Karma. (85cd-86)

She is the Bhairavī of the Mothers of the letter of the left who has become manifest (prakaṭā). Then, by the rotation of the forms (mūrti) of Bhairava's letters whose minds are absorbed in that meditation,[57] she, (the goddess) Kubjikā, whose form (ākāra) are the qualities (of Nature) (guṇa), manifests within the Ocean (of the Yoni of letters) and abides in the energy (kardama) of the Heroes who are Śiva principles.[58] She who is the triple Gesture of the Void of the Liṅga is the Liṅga with (sonic iconic) Form (mūrtiliṅga) (manifest in this way) in order to accomplish the three (energies of the Yoni and all the triads). (87-88)

She is the one form (mūrti) of he whose form is Śiva. Both are with form and without form. The Kaula division is without form; then it is called 'Liṅga'. (89)

Its own authority (independent of all others), it is (both) the light of all living beings and what conditions them (nirodha). It is the body as the Liṅga that is the stable mind within the agency of the instrument of (its) energies. (90)

Such is that Śāmbhava Yoga, the abode within the centre of Power (śakti). It is (the reality) which is both supreme (transcendant) and inferior (immanent) born of Yoga by the conjunction of the mortal and the immortal. (91)

Again, the Triad is the triple rotation of the energies, the maṇḍala on top of the Doomsday Fire. (It is) the Liṅga that, by the sequence of the divisions of six, is the Ocean arisen from (the Point which is the) Parasol of the Snake (ahicchatra). (92)

That power, which is the supreme will and is called the Yoni (bhagākhyā) with six divisions. She is the Yoginī with many forms, Indrāṇī, the deity of the Brahman. (93)

Again, she is well fixed, immobile within the Tree (of the Point) by means of the Krama of the Tree. As (the stream of energies) reversed (and merged into the Point), the (sonic) form (of the Vidyā) (mūrti) (in the Point), which is the lineage (anvaya) (of the series of energies), is understood in a moment. (94)

By practicing (nisevana) in the centre of Passion, the Lord of Yogis is Kāmadeva.[59] Wordly pleasures (sukhabhoga) and worldly experiences (bhoga) are due to Passion and (insight into) the teaching of the Void (vyomanirṇaya). (95)

The formless (reality) (arūpa) is fivefold as 1) insight (nirṇaya) into (the nature) of all mantras, 2) Raudrī's energy (mātrā), 3) the condition (gati) within the supreme, 4) (the state) beyond (that) state along with 5) the mind and the rest (that begins with it).[60] (96)

The group of six energies has become threefold by the intent (kalpa) to churn the Command. The conception of intent (saṁkalpakalpanā) manifests (as the) consciousness (vijñāna) of the Supreme Lord.[61] (97)

This is also the maturation (vipāka) of the three worlds (and it takes place) by reflecting on the beginning (upodghāta) (of all things). The supreme mantra, which, both superior (transcendant) and inferior (immanent), is beyond mantra, is based on (the letter) A (āśrita).[62] (98)

O Bhairava, the supreme (goddess) (Parā) who is both within the source (of all things) and (the reality) without a source (garbhavigarbhasthā), the Timeless (atithi), and the cage of the Self - the term for the bliss of sport, has been declared to you. (99)

The scholar who, devoid of the knowledge of the commentary (bhūmikā) corrupts the meaning (of this scripture) and the one who makes a commentary (bhūmikā) by himself (without any grounding in the scriptures), that corrupting one, goes to hell. (100)

This is the (sixty-fourth) chapter which is the emergence of the transmission (kramodaya) with regards to the description concerning the Plane of the Pentad and the Triad. It belongs to the primordial descent into the great sacrifice of the Churning Bhairava in the tradition (anvaya) that consists of seventy million (verses) that has emerged on the Path of Meru and (extends) for more than a hundred thousand quarter (verses). It has been brought (down to earth) into the sacred seat of the Command (ājñāpīṭha) along the path of the Seat of Knowledge (vidyāpīṭha). It is the ultimate purport of the Subsequent Six Thousand (verses) of the Pure Division (vimalabhedottaraṣaṭka) in the division beginning with `KĀ' in the venerable scripture of twenty-four thousand (verses) (known as) the Svāminīmata of the Supreme Lord's command as uttered within the Tradition of the Mother (ambākrama).

CHAPTER SIXTY-FIVE

The Category of the Self.

The Realisation of the Self by Means of the Planes of Yoga[1]

The venerable (goddess) Vakrā said:

The pure (reality that) contains Parā (parāgarbha), Atithīśa (Bhairava), the Timeless Lord, the cage of the Self, and the Hermitage of Kailāsa, which is the bliss of sport, is the Western House.[2] (1)

In the last and supreme birth, when seven lives have passed,[3] the treasure chest of knowledge,[4] which is (miraculous) like a sky flower, manifests. (2)

Māyā that flows through the cavity of the navel is like a flower. (It is) the spiritual discipline of the Self and the consciousness of the mind that has as if been offered as an oblation. (3)

The Path (adhvara) is the object of purification. The Path is the deity of the field of the Path of Meru (merumārga). Having known (that), (the Path) is said to be the lineage (santāna) (of the series of deities of the Krama). (4)

The lineage (santāna) (of the series of deities of the Krama) is that of the jar of the image (of the deity) (mūrtikumbha) (which is the Point) and it abides stable (and fixed) like a jar.[5] Having first learnt the due order, it is then said to be the lineage (santāna) (of the Krama deities). (5)

Then, by virtue (of the power) of those things that exist in the east and west, north and south, then, (known) in due order, the intellect and mind of one who is free of passion (shines with) the radiance of a wish-granting gem.[6] (6)

This (world) is the dawning of that radiance and (its) setting is its ultimate plane.[7] Having known (that), (the liberated state which is right) conduct (caryā)[8] arises and the one who is established in it, (divested of ignorance), is naked (digambara).[9] (7)

A and the letter Ā, the letters I and Ī and the light of the Half-moon (ardhacandrikā).[10] (Thus) the Vidyā that opens the eye (of knowledge) is consciousness (vijñāna) and the purification of the mind. (8)

Having attained the seventh by abandoning the six, the eighth is the imperishable plane.[11] It is flawless, without beginning, the plane present in Sound and the End of Sound.[12] (9)

The blockage brought about by (the lower) planes (of existence) of one who is blocked by the blockage of the (lower) five (planes) is due to the (power of) the supreme Command. The Ocean that precedes the fluctuations and waves of the mind is the Supreme Plane.[13] (10)

Power is the ocean of the three principles.[14] She is the accomplished Liṅga and she takes three steps.[15] The triad of forms (mūrtitrika) is the (immanent) tradition of Kula (represented by the triangular Yoni). Transcendent, it is the Bhairava of the sacred seat (of the Point). (11)

Solely by means of the triad (of the energies of the Yoni) (one becomes) a yogi praised as being on the plane (of Yoga). Praise (kīrtana)[16] is common to all, while the Ocean of Kula is the western (tradition). (12)

The twenty-seven divisions (of the Krama) (are formed) by the awakened consciousness of the sequence of the six planes (ṣaṭpadakramabodha). Extracted by means of the reality of the planes (of Yoga) (bhūmikārtha), having know that (one attains) the Supreme Plane.[17] (13)

Free of doubt and supreme, it removes the ignorance of yogis. Without having known the teaching concerning the reality of the planes (of Yoga), one is not liberated. (14)

Removing error with regard to the sequence of the Youth, this is the essence that has came down through the Kaulakrama of the Kula of the root tradition. (15)

The Necessity of the Scripture to know the Planes of Yoga and Liberate Others

Hard to know, you have uttered this, the (teaching concerning) the reality of the planes yogis (experience). Having known (that) by means of the current of the transmission (kramogha) of the hundred *sūtra*s, [18] (right) conduct (caryā) is achieved. (16)

One who has been purified by the reality of the planes (of Yoga) and is devoted to (the teaching) of the lineage (of teachers), attains the supreme plane within the supreme (reality) that is tranquil and flawless.[19] (17)

Even if someone possesses the Command, he cannot free (others) if he (himself remains) deluded. If the teacher makes mistakes (bhrānti) in the Krama and the maṇḍala, (his) disciple is not liberated from the ocean of transmigration that is so hard to traverse. Therefore, abandoning error (bhrānti), one should practice the Kaula teaching (jñāna). (18-19)

One should perform the initiation into the explanation (of this scripture) (vyākhyādīkṣā) (only in this way) and in no other way at any time. O goddess, he who assumes authority without having understood the meaning of (this) scripture damages himself and the course of his existence (gati) is severed at the root. (20-21ab)

Having learnt this, the meaning of the scripture of the western Kaula House that belongs to the first (of all) lineages (anvaya), the liberated one should liberate (others). O Great God, he is (truly one who) has authority, otherwise (if he does not know this, he merely) bears the name of (a teacher but is not really one). (21cd-22)

The Liberated State

The Void of Consciousness and the bliss of dense (uninterrupted) consciousness of sentient beings that discerns (reality) is the supreme form of the Brahman and is said to be the consciousness of the Self. (23)

The Yoga (true) yogis (experience) takes place perpetually within the Wheel of the Sky (of consciousness) (khecakra) by the practice (of this teaching). And once that supreme Brahman has been attained, he moves on the path of liberation. (24)

By the reversal (of the fettered condition), he reaches the supreme abode called the Yoni (bhaga). It is said to be the source (bhaga) of the six - lordship of all, righteousness (dharma), fame, majesty (śrī), dispassion and liberation. (25)

It is the means by which the checking of the fluctuations of the mind is made stable. O Lord of Yoga, the sixfold Self[20] becomes the very essence of certainty and by churning the three channels, he possesses the triple divinity of the three (worlds).[21] Having learnt the way of the Great Path, who is not liberated from bondage? (27-28ab)

The Four Sacred Seats

Uḍḍiyāna

The sacred seat of Uḍḍiyāna, which is called the Yoni and the Image of Power (śaktibimba) of the triangular (triprakāra) hearth of Moon, Sun and Fire, (now) belongs to him. (28cd-29ab)

Accomplishment (siddhi) on the great path of liberation is said to be the Supreme Power (kalā) which, as the resonance of the resonance (of consciousness) (dhvanininināda), is Anāmikā (the goddess Nameless) (who is also) called Nectar. She is the mother of the universe, Kulakaulinī, who intensely brilliant (sudīptā), is called `arousal' (kṣobha). (29cd-30)

Jālandhara

On the right, she resides in the sacred seat of Jāla in the form of the flame of the Great Light.[22] Rudrāṇī is well known in (her) fierce (raudra) aspect which is the form of liberation. Filled with the nectar of the left, she is satisfied and resides in the left corner (of the triangular Yoni). (31-32ab)

Pūrṇagiri

Born of Speech (Giroditā) is the mother whose form is perfectly complete in (the sacred seat of) Pūrṇagiri. To her who is constantly impelled by (man's) forefathers in order to achieve liberation, belongs Bhairava's hermitage (called) Pūrṇaka, which (when) attained, is the full emanation of the mind. (32cd-33)

Repetition (of mantra), visualization, and worship in the Void is said to be lustration within the Cavity (of the emptiness of pure consciousness). The way of the gods is in the north, while the way of the ancestors is in the south. In the middle is the bridge said to be the first movement (towards emanation) (pravṛttyādya), which is the supreme Command. (34-35ab)

Kāmarūpa

The sacred seat called Kāma, worshipped by the best of the gods, is located in front of it. Having known it, the yogi can both grace and obscure (others). (35cd-36ab)

He destroys the impurity of the fettered and so too (brings about his) universal pervasion within the universe. The cause of the stability of the world of transmigration he, the reciter of mantra, (brings about) creation, persistence and destruction. (36cd-37ab)

The Wheel of the Sky of Consciousness

(The energy of) universal pervasion (spreads out) within the supreme Wheel and (emerges) from the centre of it in the form of the Liṅga. She is Kālī, a transformation (vikalā) of the Moon, and she delights in supreme bliss. (37cd-38ab)

She is Kaulinī (who is Kuṇḍalinī) and her form is (circular) like an earring (kuṇḍalākāra). She is the power that has arisen from (Void which is) the foundation of (Vāgbhava), the Root (of the energy of the Yoni).[23] Having contemplated her with the mind, and gradually lifted her up, the wise man should perceive (her), she who is the imperishable (power), with the mind in the Sound (that emanates from) the Point in the Supreme Abode. In the Wheel of the Sky (of consciousness), she is Khecarī (the Skyfarer); residing in the Sky (of consciousness), she is the Image of the Moon (candrabimba). (38cd-40ab)

(She is) one and she is the oneness (samarasa) of the three: Śiva, Śakti and the Self. (She is) the state of persistence, the (universal) nature that operates within the reality of the planes (of Yoga) (bhūmikārtha). (40cd-41ab)

(The supreme reality) whose mark is supreme bliss becomes one when the activity (saṁcāra) of Śiva, Śakti and the Self takes place within the Wheel of the Sky (of consciousness). (41cd-42ab)

Thus the Supreme Power is the imperishable cause of happines which, situated above (all others), is said to be beyond the path of the Point and Sound.[24] (42c-43ab)

The Location of the Five Brahmās

Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Rudra, Īśvara and Sadāśiva - one should known that (these) are the Five Brahmās. I will tell (you) their location (sthāna). (43cd-44ab)

Brahmā's place is in the Heart. Viṣṇu is located in the throat. Rudra abides in the palate. Again, Īśvara is at the end of the Obstructress (nirodhinī). (44cd-45ab)

The place of the Point is said to be above the glottis where it is blocked on the upper path. The place of Sound is above that. Śiva abides there.[25] He is the god, who beyond the qualities (guṇa) (of Nature), is both supreme (transcendent) and inferior (immanent).[26] (45cd-46)

Kuṇḍalinī and the Attainment of the Supreme State

Churned by eternal bliss (nityānandarūpa), (Kuṇḍalinī) abides (sthitā) above that.[27] Within that, power is said to be (the reality) called the Yoni, whose path is upwards. (47)

When (the true nature of) the Six Parts (ṣaṭprakāra), which is the Great Arising (mahodaya) (of emanation), has been known by practice, then that (energy) of will, knowledge and action, endowed with the power of the Self which, full of aesthetic delight (rasa), is like nectar, pours out (of herself). (48-49ab)

(Her) mark is supreme bliss and (her) form is crooked (like) a snake. She is the essential nature (of all things) and by means of her, it (all) dissolves away into the Six Parts.[28] (49cd-50ab)

(The yogi), having penetrated the Door of Brahmā, enters the Supreme Abode (pura) where the lower states are destroyed and the supreme state of (liberated) yogis (arises) (50cd-51ab)

(The energy) that removes impurity triumphs once the path of Nirvāṇa has been attained and Sadāśiva, who pervades the universe, merging with the parts (pada) (of the lower Praṇavas),[29] dissolves (away). (51cd-52ab)

(She is) Cañcalā (The Fickle One), the supreme Vidyā, Bindumālinī (Garlanded with Points), who (resides) in the Sky (of consciousness). (The yogi) should drink with the mouth (of consciousness) the digit of the Moon which is the wine of the Two Points.[30] (52cd-53ab)

In order to (achieve) liberation, (the yogi) should draw that (energy towards him) again in that way by means of the two nostrils of the nose.[31] (Thus) the yogi who through constant practice has merged (into the supreme state) should conquer old age and death. (53cd-54ab)

(In this way all) diseases are quelled; (even) leprosy is no more. The lord of yogis who, established in (each Praṇava) the instrument (of mantra), is free of the decay (of old age) attains (the goal). (54cd-55ab)

The Rise of Kuṇḍalinī

Sustained by the individual soul, that power resides constantly in the lotuses of the navel, the heart, and the face, which is the third. (55cd-56ab)

The Lotus of the Heart

Once (Kuṇḍalinī) has been firmly fixed in one place within the lotus of the heart that is generated from worldly experience and is adorned with pure consciousness, one should reflect upon one's own origination (svasaṁbhāva). (56cd-57ab)

Merged in the Space within the heart, (Kuṇḍalinī) is in the centre of the capsule of the lotus. One should contemplate it with a one-pointed mind and (thus) attain the supreme state of being. (57cd-58ab)

(The yogi) should, according to (his) strength, sustain the supreme and imperishable abode (sthāna) in the mind within the heart. (It should be kept) there immobile at all times within the flame of the lamp (of the Self). (58cd-59ab)

(It should be churned) there repeatedly between the fire sticks of the breath by the mind. Then, O god, it shines brilliantly, like the sun free of clouds.[32] (59cd-60ab)

Once the yogi has known that supreme divine energy which is established in, and pervades through, the vortexes (of the psychic centres), he is liberated from the world of transmigration which is so hard to cross. (60cd-61ab)

The Palate to the Head

The yogi should view the mind (citta) located in the lower part below the cavity of the palate. Then, if the mind is checked and sits (fixed in one place) for some hours (muhurta), (a sensation) occurs within the sense of touch like (a host) of ants covering (and crawling over the body). Once the state generated through (this) tactile sensation has been attained, the mind should not be moved again.[33] (61cd-63ab)

The End of the Twelve

(In this way the yogi) reaches the subtle opening (at the top of the head which is as narrow) as a hundredth part of the tip of a hair.[34] Once he has quit (the body) through that opening, he should enter into the eternal plane of power, the perpetually active (sadodita) abode, up to a distance of eleven fingers (breadth). (63cd-64)

There above (that) is the supreme, pure (reality), (brilliant and powerful) like the fire of (universal) destruction, full of series of waves, ripples, eddies and currents (of energy).[35] One who recites mantra should think of it as falling perpetually into the lotus of his own heart. (65-66ab)

Then the yogi, free of old age and death, is victorious and he reaches the supreme, omnipresent (reality) beyond power and the Sky (of consciousness). (66cd-67ab)

All disturbances cease and that supreme plane (of being) is known (completely) without a doubt. He attains power (bala) at each level (of being) and the knowledge of reality (tattvavijñāna) within his own body. This is my fixed (and certain) opinion. (67cd-68)

The knot in the heart is split apart, all doubts cease, and all sins are destroyed when that (reality), which is both supreme (transcendent) and inferior (immanent), has been perceived. (69)

(The yogi) should gradually split apart (the subtle body) by means of supreme bliss, and once he has penetrated through the supreme abode with (his) intellect firmly fixed, he should contemplate the subtle and unsustained consciousness of the power of the Self. Those whose intellect (mati) is (fixed) in (that ultimate reality) free of support are, without a doubt, well established. (70-71)

Or else, if (that power) is spontaneously established in the body and within the sphere of the Self, she who is the rising (spiritual energy) of those who are awakened, returns back (to its inactive state) in one who is not awake. (72)

This is the (sixty-fifth) chapter which is the emergence of the transmission (kramodaya) with regards to the description concerning the Category of the Self. It belongs to the primordial descent into the great sacrifice of the Churning Bhairava in the tradition (anvaya) that consists of seventy million (verses) that has emerged on the Path of Meru and (extends) for more than a hundred thousand quarter (verses). It has been brought (down to earth) into the first sacred seat along the path of the Seat of Knowledge (vidyāpīṭha). It is the ultimate purport of the Subsequent Six Thousand (verses) of the Pure Division (vimalabhedottaraṣaṭka) in the division beginning with `KĀ' in the venerable scripture of twenty-four thousand (verses) (known as) the Svāminīmata of the Supreme Lord's command as uttered within the Tradition of the Mother (ambākrama).

CHAPTER SIXTY-SIX

The Octad of Kula according to the Tradition of the (goddess) Vakrā

The Self: the Lord of the Wheel and the Goddess

The venerable (goddess) Vakrā said:

[1]The foundation of the Lord of the Wheel is within the leader of the Transmission of the Youth. When the two polarities[2] are present in the Void (ākāśa), the Ocean (of the Yoni) is made manifest. (1)

The real nature of (this), the maṇḍala of the entire universe, has been elucidated in (a manner that) accords with (its) six divisions. Sixfold, it is located in the foundation of the (one) pure (reality). (2)

(It is) the Wheel of the Yoni of all things, while the empowered one (samārtha) is Bhairava. Free of impurity, he shines (there) established in the Wheel and (the Void in which the) triple polarity (of Sun, Moon and Fire) has ceased.[3] (3)

He contemplates Yoga constantly in (this cosmic) Hermitage within the sequence of the planes (of existence) (bhūmikrama) by means of the Yoga (that unites them within him). He is bliss with no beginning or end and awakens the lotus of the heart from darkness. (4)

(He is) the Bhairava of the Mothers who possesses the Kula (of energies). He is the Lord of the Sun of the Wheel that is full (and complete). The destroyer of all things, he is Vāgbhava (AIṀ),[4] the slayer of (his) foes. (5)

(He is) fragrance, the supreme Taste, consciousness (vijñāna), the Cavity (suṣira), and Hara. He is the beauty revealed in the teaching and is free of attachment to the polarities. (He is the wish-granting gem called) Kaustubha, the Lord of the Mantra of the Wheel of the Void (ākāśacakra). He is equal (in exercising his) power to bestow glory and fulfilment to one who is in (his) seventh life.[5] (6-7)

He is the Unstruck Sound, free of sin, the mass of fire of the impurity linked to the body of birth (in saṁsāra) which is the Fire (of the Divine Will) and pervasion (viṣa). He is Śrīnātha the Lord, the Half-moon of the pure Wheel that connects (the breath and with it all things together). He is the Self engaged in unfolding (the energy of Kuṇḍalinī) of the one who seeks to conquer the path of liberation. (8-9)

The Self is free and liberates. Indeed, the Self is said to be the one who liberates. The yogi is never bereft (of this liberated state) and by (his) liberation he attains (the supreme) plane (of existence). (10)

The rays of consciousness of the rotating Wheel of (the goddess's) Command (emanate from it) by churning (it). (Thus) the maṇḍala is made manifest by the destruction of Karma. (11)

Silent and one by nature, it is the bud (golaka) of the lineage (āvali) of the (Krama of the) Kadamba (tree). Having pierced through it by the joy of effortless sport (helā) (of the union of Śiva and Śakti), (the yogi) attains the supreme cause (kāraṇa) (of all things). (12)

There are said to be sixty-four wheels. They are the rays (of the one Wheel) and their form is consciousness (bodha). Their mistress is within (them). She possesses six aspects and is free of the mind. She has risen up by the middle path, and is enveloped by the six letters (of HSKHPHREṀ). Then these (energies) of the Lord of Kula along with (their) letters emerge out of the Cavity (vivara) (of the Triangle). (13-14)

There is (actually only) one Cavity called the Cave of (of the goddess) Kādambī whose nature is awakened consciousness. Established there, she grants the sustenance of the knowledge of the six Wheels. (15)

The Wheels of the Void, the Earth and the Directions

(There is) 1) the Wheel of the Void (khacakra), then 2) the Wheel of the Earth (bhūcakra) and 3) the Wheel of the Universe (viśvacakra), the abode of consciousness.[6] (The pervasion) of (these) three Wheels is the Great Pervasion and this (state of) pervasion comes about by the Command of Kula. The Wheel of the Void

The Wheel of the Void is within the World of the Hexagram[7] and is the Supreme Void and the rest. It is the Yoga and knowledge of those whose (unenlightened) minds have been destroyed by (contemplating) the Bird (of the vital breath). (17)

The Wheel of the Earth

The Wheel of the Earth pertains to the (energies) that move on the earth. The (male counterpart) who moves on the earth splits up the womb (of the letters). He is (well) established when (that state of consciousness) free of (mental) activity arises, brought about by the cessation of the fluctuations of the mind. (18)

The Wheel of the Directions[8]

The movement within consciousness of the Lord who moves within consciousness is the wind of the gods of the directions. He is the Supreme Soul who eliminates time and space. (19)

In this way, the threefold Wheel is the Lord of Mantra within the Maṇḍala of the Void. The Wheel of the Void of all mantras is established in the Void and so is threefold.[9] (20)

(That) Wheel is free of the three qualities and devoid of the sixteen vowels. That Wheel is Unstruck Sound (asvara).[10] The deity of the Wheel of the hosts of goddesses, Siddhas of the Wheel and mantras is born from the vitality (vīrya) (of consciousness). (21-22ab)

The master (of the Wheel) who resides in the abode (pura) of the Wheel of the Command is the agent of emanation. Both the Sun and the Moon (dawn), in due order by the consciousness of his innate bliss. Having illumined them, the Shade of the Darkness (of transcendence manifests)[11] and these two give light within the Shade. (22cd-23)

Having filled all the darkness of those who attend to the light of the body, he who knows (that) self-born knowledge kindles the Fire of the Command (for them). (24)

The Fire has two digits of energy, while those of the Sun are two and three. The firmly fixed Yoni is the supreme Mother of the Fire of the Yoni. (25)

The Sun is within the flame of Fire and the light of the Moon is within the Sun. Such are these three Wheels, the mothers of the Wheels of the Sky, the Earth and the Directions. (26)

The Wheel of the Command[12]

The one house of (all) the Mothers is the stainless Command of the Fire. One should stand firm within the (one) supreme (reality) without parts: then energy (kalā) is generated. (27)

The dynamic activity (calanātmākriyā) that takes place in the (one) dual nature (of Śiva and Śakti) by means of one's own innate nature is the Yoga of Action;[13] it is the knowledge of Kula - here the Command abides immobile (niścala) in the centre.[14] (28)

By checking (the flucuations of the mind) the supreme Wheel that is immobile (niścala) possesses the essential nature of knowledge (jñānarūpadhṛk). (Thus) the gathering (melaka) of the Mothers on the supreme plane (of being) takes place during the Night (of the duality of Māyā) within the Wheel of the Command. (29)

Once attained the supreme (state of being) in the middle of the Night, the Wheel becomes the energy (mātrā) of (all) the Mothers. May the loving joy of passion (ratiprīti) increase in this way the play of intercourse (ramaṇa) without the Liṅga. (30)

The Wheel of the Void (khacakra)

The Wheel of the Void is in the middle of the Void (of consciousness) and is adorned with the Five Voids.[15] This is the meditation of (truly) detached (yogis). The bliss there is naked (and free of limitations) (digambara).[16] (31)

Then the Wheel is the Lord of Motion (saṁcarīśa), the Supreme Heart of (all true) yogis.[17] The Heart of the Void (of consciousness) and the Wheel of the Void, which possesses that bliss, should be made to move upwards (plāvya). (32)

Then (one experiences) the bliss that has arisen from the Wheel and (that) bliss is the Void (of ultimate reality that is both) supreme (transcendant) and inferior (immanent).[18] Firstly (then), one should purify the supreme Kula, which is the primordial ocean in the Heart. (33)

Bhairava's supreme syllable, is the dawning of the mantra of (Kuṇḍalinī) the Jewel of Kula which is the Being and knowledge of Being of everything. (34)

The syllable is Bhairava, the great Lord Anāmaka (Unnamed). He is Kaulīśa who is power (prabhava) and the bliss of divine glory (vibhavānanda); the Lord (prabhu) who sports (with his energy).[19] (35)

The lineage (santāna) (of the series of deities) is in the centre between the two paths of Meru, namely, those of Light (prabhā) and Beauty (kānti). Having known both by means of the reverse sequence,[20] the state (of the highest) practice (ācāra) (becomes) clearly apparent. (36)

Having made it clearly apparent, the Bridge, which is the Peak (syllable) of four letters, becomes clearly manifest. (Thus) the expansion of the Supreme Self, which consists of four digits of energy (catuṣkalā), abides (unlimited and ineffable) as the Void. (37)

The supreme and ultimate union of the gods and goddesses takes place there.[21] (Although) it cannot be named (anākhya), this Wheel, which is the body of Śiva's power (śāmbhavītanu), is called the Sound of Śiva (śivanāda). (38)

The dark (kṛṣṇā) goddess (Kuṇḍalinī) resides there.[22] Situated on the Conch (śaṅkha),[23] she is Śaṅkhinī (the Goddess of the Conch) who is Bhavā, (Rudra's consort). (She is) the aesthetic savour (rasa) and the rest that can be perceived through the emotive state (bhāva)[24] of the embodied souls who have tasted (this fundamental) state being (bhāva). (39)

The root of the calyx of the Ocean[25] (of the lotus of the Yoni) is conjoined with the two emissions (of the Sun and Moon).[26] Within the glottis (ghaṇṭikā) one should purify the Wheel of both the energies (kalā) and Sound (nāda). (40)

The purification of all the goals of action is the universal form of purification. It is (that) reversed action (viparītakriyā) within the letters that splits apart the Point. (41)

The purification of the Point is the purification of the well controlled (damana) mind endowed (with the energy) that fills it (with bliss) of the devotee who is firm (in his devotion and well) established in the (observance of his inner) vow. (42)

The means (of attainment) (sādhana) belongs to Amarīśa (the Immortal Lord), the lord of the gods whose dynamic state (gati) is of many kinds. Purification is the purifiction of the principles (of existence) (tattva), which serves to attain the (supreme) reality (tattva). (43)

The Root

The path of the principles is fivefold. It is the path of (the letter) A (the energy of the New Moon) and its nature is action.[27] One who knows the three times should contemplate Ciñciṇīnātha who is (located) in (the glottis at) the root of the ear. (44)

Then the energy (of consciousness) (kalā) should sustain the soul of (all true) yogis with (the power of) Nature. The Point (bindu) is the Wheel (cakra) worshipped by the hosts of gods.[28] It oozes (nectar) from the Root (of the glottis). (45)

The one supreme Gander who is Bhairava's consciousness and bliss (emerges) from the Root and, divided up according to whether it moves (downwards or) upwards, it is repose and the power that illumines (and inspires). (46)

The Root is said to be (the aggregate) of all the energies (kalā) and that Root is Kula.[29] The entire (aggregate) of energies is the City and so Ṭaṅkiṇī[30] is the deity of phenomenal existence. (47)

The mistress of the gods who is the mistress of the Wheel is aged and holds a skull. The form of the Skull is the Full Moon. There the deity is the New Moon (48)

She is (the energy) of the Skull in the cremation ground of Karavīra merged (in the transcendent) above.[31] The Equal One (samanā) arises when the city of the Cavity of the Void (karandhra) has been pierced. (49)

The Wheel of Unstruck Sound

Having known the Self whose form is the totality (of all things) and is the (object of the) teaching that can be grasped by the intellect, the one who knows the mantra of Unstruck Sound easily understands the behaviour of the Moon (śaśicaryā). (50)

Rub together ‘above’ and ‘below’ by differentiating the coming and going (of the breath)[32] and, having concentrated the mind, (experience the) bliss in the City of Unstruck Sound.[33] (51)

Then the Wheel arises that is the great ocean of the aggregate of (the vital) winds. Then the Tree is born in the beautiful (cremation ground of) Karavīra. (52)

Hara’s energy, which is the Supreme Shade,[34] is the calyx of the lotus. It is the first (of the energies) and, on the path of the Heart, it is called `the Plane of Repose' (viśrāmabhūmikā). (53)

Located in the Wheel of Unstruck Sound, one should make of it the plane that bestows Nirvāṇa.[35] The abode of all yogis, it is the plane of Unstruck Sound of the embodied soul. (54)

(The series of letters) ending with the letter Ka are the form of Sound. They are encapsulated (by the series of letters) ending with the letter Sa. Conjoined with the digit of energy of the Half-moon, (this is) the emperor of mantras called the Triple Peak.[36] (55)

(It is Vāgbhava, the syllable) of the (element) Earth of the King of Mantras of the wheel of Unstruck Sound of (all) mantras. Once formed the (mantric) instrument (pertaining) to (the element) Earth, the instrument (of mantra becomes) the abode of the Earth.[37] (56)

Again, that is Fire in the midst of the sixteen (energies of the vowels) and is marked with the energies of the Moon. Born from the unfolding flow (prasara) (of energies), it is the (mantric) cause that gives all yogis bliss.[38] (57)

Consciousness (vijñāna) is the mind (citta) which is the bliss of the Lotus. It is the Bhairava of the principle of the Wheel of Unstruck Sound[39] which is known by the modalities (of the energies of the letters governed by the) Heroes (vīravṛtti).[40] (58)

Having generated (kṛtvā) (the movement of the breath, which is the) dynamic state (gati) of Night and Day, (the yogi) should expand the circle of the (energies of the) vowels having contemplated the abode of the Cave in the Heart which has become pure consciousness.[41] (59)

The Wheel Filled with Jewels

Once one has known the mantra of the movement (of the breath and realised) the consciousness of (that) dynamism, and the coming and going (of the breath),[42] the light, which is like that of the Full Moon, (shines) between the Jewel (of Kuṇḍalinī) and the individual soul.[43] (60)

This is the Wheel filled with the gems (of the energies of the letters), which is both Śiva and Śakti. Then, because the Sun and Moon have dissolved away, Fire arises.[44] (61)

Again, that is Space, the Endless One, Nature (prakṛti) and the Gastric Fire (jāṭharāgnika). Once the abode (pura) of Śiva's power has been bound, it is then (the Wheel) Filled with Jewels.[45] (62)

And she is the energy of the letters which is (all) the energies of the current (of the transmissions) of the Liṅgas. (She is the) deity with six faces of the Kaula (union) of both emissions. (63)

If the (energy), which is of that nature, abides there in both (the channels) on the right and the left, then the lunar plane arises of (all) the channels that nourish (the subtle body). (64)

(Then there is) said to be (only) one channel (nāla) (of the inner breath), which is the plane (of realisation formed) by the (various) divisions of the channels (nāḍī), and one experiences the awareness (manana) of all existing things[46] as awakened consciousness (bodha). (65)

The arising there of (the energy) of vocalic sound (svara) (corresponds to) the contraction of the (one) universal channel (sarvanāḍika), while the expansion of all the Liṅgas[47] (corresponds to) the radiantly powerful (Wheel) Full of Jewels (maṇipūrṇa). (66)

From (this) radiant energy (tejas) arises Sound (nāda) and from Sound, Word by means of the channels and the breath (that strikes) the teeth, lips, palate and tongue. (67)

Then 'letter' (varṇa) arises which is the eightfold deity of the eight classes of letters. The abode of all the deities is the Full Moon.[48] (68)

Again, Koṅkaṇa is located in Maṇipūra, the Wheel well enflammed with (all the) deities (of the letters). The mistress (nāyakī) and deity there is Kinkiṇī who is dark blue. (69)

She is the divine abode of the gods, the Cave of (all) the abodes of the God of the gods. This, the Wheel of the Supreme Lord, is the dwelling place of all the Mothers (of the letters) and the House of the Yoginīs is merged within it. (70-71ab)

The Wheel of the Self-supported

Then the Sun and Moon move (vikrama) in the middle between the navel and the (Wheel of the) Foundation and the Void (kha) called the three measures (of energy) (trimātra), well established, is located in the triple power (triśakti). It possesses the energy of the three kinds (of light of the Sun, the Moon and Fire) and is divided into the fifty Liṅgas (of the letters). (71cd-72)

(This) Wheel is the lord of the Wheel of the Vowels; it is Koṅkoṇa, which is the support (of the subtle body) (adhiṣṭhāna).[49] It is the innate (divine) authority (svādhikāra) of the goddesses which is (their) divine support (adhiṣṭhāna).[50] (73)

The consciousness of purity within one's own body is there (in that Wheel) and is (thus) grounded in (ultimate) reality.[51] Endowed with the four sacred seats, it is Fire, the Wheel of the letter E. (74)

Thus, located between the two triangles, (this) Wheel is said to be its own support (svādhi). Called the `support', it is the Wheel of the Yoni which is (both) supreme (transcendant) and inferior (immanent).[52] (75)

The Wheel of the Root – the Yoni

(There is a) Wheel between the anus and the genitals, beautifully adorned with the Fire and Moon.[53] Pervaded by the lunar Point (indubindu), it is Khageśa, the Supreme Lord. (This is the) Wheel of the Root (kandacakra), which is said to be the Jewel that splits apart the vital centres (marman)[54] of the channels (of the vital breath) (nāḍī). (76-77ab)

Called Nādamālinī, the supreme power is each single (type). Again, (when) along with the five aspects (prakāra),[55] she is threefold[56] (her) form is that of the Yoni (bhagākṛti). Her face the Yoni, She is the Sun, Moon and Fire within the Wheel of Mantra.[57] (77cd-78)

The hermitage of all (true) yogis,[58] it is the Peak (syllable) (śekhara) the form of which is a water chestnut (śṛṅgāta). It looks like a moving circle (valaya) and, indivisable, it is hard to cross beyond it. (79)

It is transported by the force of Śakti (with which it is one) like that of the wind and the sky. The yogi there is said to be Ṣaṣṭha as he is nondual by nature. His energy is said to be Ṣaṣṭhā, the deity called Raudrī. All things are contained within the Yoni by just blocking her (dissipated, deluding activity). (80-81)

By abandoning the six, (the yogi realises) the imperishable energy on the seventh[59] empowered plane of grace and punishment (nigrahānugraha) which is (that of) Khageśa (the Lord Who Moves in the Void) whose form is the Void. (82)

Then the joy arises which is the Jewel and the individual soul (maṇipudgala) located within the living being (jīva).[60] Located below, it is the Knot of the Living Being (jīvagranthika), which is the foundation of the Triangle of Birth (janmakoṇa). (83)

In the midst of the waves and ripples of the mind,[61] it imparts the teaching concerning the Assembly of Sounds (śabdarāśi).[62] Kaulīśa, who is the Bhairava of the Gander (haṁsabhairava), (is present) in the upsurge (of power) (udbhava) that takes place there. (84)

It is located in (Vāgbhava) the letter of the Skull within the Wheel that serves as the door of the Skull and Mahālakṣamī is the sustaining power[63] in the Wheel within the abode of the Void.[64] (85)

The Wheel of the Foundation breaks through the ten channels (nāḍī) by checking the ten (vital) winds. In this way it is the abode of the dawning of accomplished mantras.[65] (86)

And his power is called Silence (Maunākhyā). Located in the Malaya (Triangle), it faces downwards. And (when that reality) is attained (siddha), (the Triangle of the Foundation) faces upwards and so that (Wheel) is the insight (of realisation) (pratyaya).[66] (87)

(Indeed) the Wheel is said to be insight (which is achieved) also by the Wheel's progressive advance (kramaṇa). (Throught it, the individual soul) whose pervasive worldly states of being (bhāva) have dissolved away, attains liberation. (88)

Such is the consciousness of Kula and (such) the sixfold Wheel of the Command. (This is) the teaching concerning the sixfold sequence of the Command, the great Kula of the (Wheel) of the Self-supported.[67] (89)

Kula is the support as it is the purification (that takes place) within the reality of the planes (of Yoga) (bhūmikārtha). It is the Sun of the Kula of Consciousness (realised by understanding just one) verse concerning of the reality of the planes (of Yoga) (bhūmikārtha). It is manifest and established in the abode of liberation of those who wish to conquer ignorance.[68] (90-91ab)

This is the (sixty-sixth) chapter which is the emergence of the transmission (kramodaya) with regards to the description concerning the Octad of Kula according to the Tradition of the (goddess) Vakrā. It belongs to the primordial descent into the great sacrifice of the Churning Bhairava in the tradition (anvaya) that consists of seventy million (verses) that has emerged on the Path of Meru and (extends) for more than a hundred thousand quarter (verses). It has been brought (down to earth) into the first sacred seat (ādyapīṭha). It is the ultimate purport of the Subsequent Six Thousand (verses) of the Pure Division (vimalabhedottaraṣaṭka) in the division beginning with `KĀ' in the venerable scripture of twenty-four thousand (verses) (known as) the Svāminīmata of the Supreme Lord's command as uttered within the Tradition of the Mother (ambākrama).

CHAPTER SIXTY-SEVEN

The Sūtra Concerning the Sequence of Principles.

The First Presentation of the Principles

Śrīnātha said:

So you have talked about the divisions of the Krama in the Root of Akula (akulakandara) and in the circle of the instruments (of mantra) (karaṇamaṇḍala) (brought about) by the expansion of mantra and Mudrā.[1] (1)

(Now tell me about) the correct manner of the arising of the principles pertaining to them which is preceded by the awareness (saṁcitti) of the Self. (Tell me) also about the (extent of) the authority of the principles in the sacred seat of Yoga (yogapīṭha)[2] within the three Kramas. (2)

The venerable (goddess) Vakrā said:

I will tell (you) briefly about the emergence of the principles (that takes place) here starting from the sacred seat of emanation up to myself whose body is crooked. (3)

Indra (who governs Earth) resides in Kāmarūpa. It is said that desire (kāmanā) is emanation.[3] Water is said to be Pūrṇagiri, while Fire (tejas) is said to be Jālandhara. (The sacred seat of) the letter OM is Air. (Thus) the one principle is threefold (as the the first three elements). There (in that case), Space is the will (icchā) and he (who governs it) is said to be Kumāra. (4-5)

Above him is Kāminyā who is the mistress of the subtle element of smell. Pūrṇā (the Full One) is the nature of taste (rasa). The subtle element of fire is Jvālinī. (6)

Oḍrā is sound (śabda) and she is threefold (as the previous three). Viṣṇu, who is in the Transmission of the Lion, is the subtle element of touch. (7)

Śrīkaṇṭha (abides) as the prescription of speech, Mahāmati is the hands. Īśvara is within the nature of the two feet and Rudra Nandi is in the genital organ (pāyu). (8)

The anus is in the form of Bhairava and it is Sadyojāta by nature. The ear belongs to the nature (of the Wheel of) Unstruck Sound, while (the Wheel) Full of Gems is the skin. (9)

(The Wheel of the) Command is the eye, while the pervasive breath is the tongue in the circle of the senses. One should know that the nose is (the Wheel of) Purity, while the (Wheel of the) Foundation is said to be the mind. (10)

The intellect is the principle Mātaṇginī, while the ego is Pulindikā. Nature is Śavarī, while the Person is said to be Vijayā.[4] (11)

(Puruṣa) is Brahmā and, one without a second (advaita), is the creator (sṛṣṭikartṛ) in the three worlds.[5] His energy (kalā) is everything (sakala) including the field of the location of (his) body (piṇḍasthāna). (12)

He brings about and terminates conjunction with the parts and limbs of the body (liṅga). He is the external Self and the inner (antaraṅga) and is described as mobile (jangama). (He is) impelled by Time along with Natural Law (niyati) in (his main) varieties together with the secondary ones. (13-14ab)

Again, the energy of Śiva is active (uditā) and without stain. She is 'with mind' (samanā), who in her essential nature is Mahantārikā,[6] the Transmental (unmanā). Blissful with her own innate bliss, she emanates the three worlds. (14cd-15ab)

I am Kubjikā the Female Neuter (napuṁsakā), Śiva's (divine) Command. By virtue of control (I have over) the senses (I have conquered) (I am) also (present) in the authority (that governs all things) within austerity. (I am) the Vidyā along with (its) encapsulation and the letters starting with Bha, part by part.[7] (15cd-17ab)

I am neither male (puruṣa) nor female (strī),[8] I am that most excellent power of the will. The Person is just the bearer of seed (bījavatmātra)[9] and is said to be the `knower of the field'. He is the agent who is both auspicious and inauspicious and is bound by (his) association with action (karman). (17cd-18)

(In the liberated state he reflects): “I am not the agent. I believe that Śiva will do (all things) because he is (in reality) the Person (puruṣa).” Again, he is said to be the aggregate of the principles (tattvapiṇḍa) from the Earth up to Śiva. Moreover, he himself is the fettered soul, (imprisoned) within the fourfold creation (bhūtasarga).[10] (And it is he who) in the eighth mental birth attains (liberation which is) the eighth place of rest.[11] (19-20)

That state which (encompasses all creation) beginning with Kāmarūpa as the first is the abode (of all things). Unless I, who am Śivā, am not worshipped with countless millions of actions, how can mortals attain (the ultimate goal) in the most excellent Śrīkrama. It is by him (who has) worshipped (in this way) that the triple impurity is cleaned away. (21-22)

The principles (of existence) become disordered as do the twenty-seven[12] planes (that correspond to them). The Krama Path (consisting of) the sacrificial rite with the maṇḍala, repetition of mantra, and Śiva's Great Vow of Knowledge, has been revealed in order to destroy (these impurities). It is above all (else) and is correct (in all respects) as is the condition (sthiti) of (the seed-syllable), Vāgbhava (AIṀ). (23-24)

The Second Presentation of the Principles

Now I will tell (you) again about the division of the principles (of existence). (25ab)

Kāmarūpa is Earth, while Water is said to be Pūrṇagiri. Jālandhara is the Great Fire (mahātejas), while Wind is the circle of (the sacred seat of) OṀ, Space is the sacred seat Tisra. The venerable City of the Moon is (Tisra’s) abode (gṛha). (25cd-26)

(These) five are said to be the Great Elements. The group of five subtle elements are (associated with) them. (The subtle element of) smell is in the Earth principle. Taste (rasa) is in the Water principle. (The subtle element of) form belongs to Fire and, next, Wind is in touch. Space is the Great Sound.* (27-28abc)

(Next I will tell you about) the five organs of action. Speech is said (to reside) in the principle of smell and the two hands in the principle of touch. Similarly, the foot (which is the organ of locomotion) is within (the subtle element of) sound and genital organ is generated within light (tejas) (which is sight). The anus arises within taste. (This is) the group of the five (organs of) action and the subtle elements. (28d-30ab)

Now, they say that the organs of sense are in the same way within the organs of action. This ear is located in the anus and the skin is within the hands. The principle of the genitals is the great eye, while the tongue is in the sphere of the feet. (30cd-31)

The nose is said to be in the principle of speech. They are (equivalent) to the Earth and the other (gross elements). He, the beginningless and imperishable Śiva, is at the head of them (all). (32)

The intellect is present in Kāmarūpa in accord with (its) function. By the power of the intellect, the mind is present in the sacred seat of Jālandhara. (33)

One should know that, by the force of the mind, the ego is within (Oḍḍiyāna) the Hermitage of the City (of the maṇḍala). Nature is located on the left path within Pūrṇagiri. (34)

The Person, who is just the bearer of seed (bījavanmātra),[13] resides in the abode of the City of the Moon. His hermitage is Sound, the Moon of the inner Self.[14] (35)

In this way, the lord's Liṅga is established in the form of the Yoni (bhagākāra). The great body (of mantra) (mahāpiṇḍa), it is the power of action and it said to be the essential nature of (every) sign of attainment (pratyaya). (36)

O god, established on the Path of Mantra,[15] I am she who saves. (I am) she, that certain (inscrutable) measure (of power) (mātrā), endowed with the qualities of duality, that belongs to Śiva. (37)

(I am) the bliss generated from the current of (the sacred seat) Tisra. Bliss is (indeed myself) Bhavamālinī. She is the mother of all living beings (and existing things) starting with the Earth onwards, part by part. (38)

In the middle, without beginning or end, devoid of arising and falling away there is a certain (undefinable) Void, a thousandth part of a hundred of what is very subtle. A state of pure contemplation, that Void is the consciousness said to be Śiva. (39-40ab)

Such is said to be the empowered (śākta) Liṅga as the essential nature of (all) the principles (tattvasvarūpeṇa). That is the Tamarind (ciñciṇī) Tree, the Lord of Fame (Kīrtideva) who resides in the sky (of pure consciousness). (40cd-41ab)

Arisen in the venerable City of the Moon, it is (the one) reality (tattva) in which (all the principles) have been gathered together (piṇḍīkṛta).[16] He indeed is the Lord of Nature, the great abode of (all) the worlds. (41cd-42ab)

All this, beginning with Ananta up to Śiva, is merged (there within it). Creation, persistence and destruction (take place there) and the fourth door (beyond these three) is also (there within it) (42cd43ab)

(It is also) Fundamental Nature (pradhāna) and, as such, bondage (pāśa), born from the waves of the ocean of Māyā, is (there) within it. In this way everything is on the path (of bondage), engaged in sexual pleasures and the other (illusory enjoyments of the world). (43cd-44ab)

Service (of the deity) and cessation (from worldly involvement) is extolled as the teaching. Her body (piṇḍa) is the support (of all things) and she is praised as me. (44cd-45ab)

Just as an innocent bird caught in a net of snares flies up (into the air) as soon as it is freed, similarly the innocent Self resides within the body (piṇḍa) (waiting to be freed). (45cd-46)

This part (of mantra), mantra (itself), form, sign and the rest is (all) in the body (piṇḍastha). Beyond Form (rūpātīta), it is omnipresent and stands above all things. Established in the Body, Established in the Word, Established in Form and Devoid of Form[17] - (thus) O Lord, I have rightly told you the fifty (verses) concerning the principles (tattvapañcāśikā). The transmission of the fifty (verses) concerning the principles (teaches) the co-ordination (samācāra) of the sacred seats with the body. O Lord of the gods, (this) has been told to you, expounded succinctly (sūtritaḥ) in the form of a sūtra. (49)

(This) is the Sūtra concerning the Sequence of Principles (tattvakrama). It belongs to the primordial descent into the great sacrifice of the Churning Bhairava in the tradition that consists of seventy million (verses) in the venerable scripture of twenty-four thousand (verses).

CHAPTER SIXTY-EIGHT

The Sūtra of the Compendium concerning Liberation.

A Visualization of the Goddess Kubjikā[1]

The venerable (goddess) Vakrā said:

(One should think of the goddess as) having six aspects, with an immense body and of the form of light, she is clothed in Yoga. (She is) everything without exception and (their) latent traces. The greatest of all, (she is) every state of being. (1)

(She is) Ciñciṇī (the goddess of the Tamarind Tree), supremely horrific as she burns dark blue, red and scarlet.[2] (She is) the Sweeper (Mātaṅginī) of the Kula, Raudrī, the goddess Kujā with six faces. (2)

She shines with (her) eighteen eyes, greedy for the pleasures of wine. Her face is the Yoni (bhānanā), her form is the Yoni (bhagākāra) and she possesses six Yonis.[3] (3)

She is in the middle of the Yoni (bhaga)[4] (of the syllable AIṀ) and, terrible, she has been encapsulated within the Yoni. A treasury of the thirty-two syllables, she is Kubjikā, the mistress of Kula.[5] She pervades the circle of the sky with the eighty-four depositions (of mantras). Indeed, she is the goddess Khageśvarī (the Skyfarer). Immortal, (she is) the pure (form of) Kālikā. (4-5)

She is the goddess Trikhaṇḍā[6] Bhairavī, she is the most excellent (goddess) Tripurā.[7] Established on the path of the Mālinī Kula, she is (the goddess) Kujā who is in the lotus of the heart. (6)

She is the light of the lamp of the Śrīkula, Barbarā (the tribal woman) of many forms.[8] (She is) the mother of Rudra, the mother of the Siddhas and the mother of the great Bhairava. (7)

She is the mother of the heroes, the mother of yogis and the mother of the sacred seats who has given birth to the universe. Endowed with the six parts, she is terrible. In her eighteen hands (she holds) a trident, dagger, sword, an arrow, (she makes a) frightening (gesture), (holds) a noose, small double-headed drum, a club and Kaula sacrificial pap (carukaulika). These nine (attributes) are on the right. In the same way there are nine (attributes) on the left.[9] (8-9ab)

(She also holds) a skull bowl, an ascetic's staff, a rosary of gems, a bow, an elephant gaud, casket (pīṭha), seal (mudrā), a club and a book rest (pustakāsana). (These are) the goddess's eighteen divine positions. One should think (of her) as having (this) form.[10] (9cd-11)

She possesses the has five parts (pada) (of mantra)[11] and, without clothes, she is clothed in nakedness.[12] (Her) eyes (are red like) the Bimba (fruit), her face is turned downwards and she wears a snake as (her) sacred thread. (12)

Or (imagine her as wearing) sacred threads made of (human) tongues and that she is adorned with the Five Ensignias. Endowed with eighteen arms, she transports (the teaching) uttered (udgira) in the Sacred Seat of Gesture (mudrāpīṭha).[13] (13)

(To her) head is fastened a rosary of vowels and she wears a necklace of letters. She is adorned with the divine sky (of consciousness) and twelve hundred million warlocks. (14)

A jewelled necklace clasps (her) neck and she is adorned with divine gems. (She is) the Supreme Goddess, beautiful with great flowers and jasmines. (15)

She is delighted with the fragrance of liquor along with (that of) sandalwood, musk and camphor. The sweet smelling directions are (her) apparel and her clothes are fragrant with fine incense. (16)

(She is) the Supreme Goddess swathed in clothes of great (value) and (adorned with) divine gems. Beyond (the sphere of) energies and omnipresent, she is above all (others). (17)

The goddess Kujā has six aspects (ṣaṭprakārā) and her form is the supreme syllable. (She who) is the forty-two syllable (Vidyā) is the (divine) Command which bears this kind of form. (18)

By nature her form is that of a hunchbacked woman (kubjā) and, within the various forms of the Vidyā, she is mother Kujā. She is the great (goddess) Kubjā who resides on the Island of the Moon and abides in Śrīkaṇṭha's grace. (19)

One should break through Kujā, the target, by means of the threefold path.[14] Having first known (this) visualization in this way, one should practice it within one's own body. (20)

One should perform the worship of the Transmission (krama), repetition of mantra and Yoga by means of this body, as one contemplates up to the end of (all) the planes (of existence), beyond that inner mental organ. (21)

(Anyone) anywhere who does not possess (knowledge of) the visualized form of (the goddess) Kujā and does not have (access) to the tradition of (the goddess) Kujā (but nonetheless) worships the Transmission, is a fettered and impure soul. (22)

For such a one, the Vidyā and the Kramamaṇḍala – all is useless and the hereafter is uncertain. As long as one does not worship (and serve) the Kula, how can one have (the experience of) pervasion within (this), the Śāmbhava Kula? (23-24ab)

The Sūtra concerning Liberation (muktisūtra)[15]

The venerable (god) Kaulīśa said:

O mistress of the God of the gods, I have heard the entire purport of the scriptures. I now wish to hear the teaching of the Sūtra concerning Liberation (muktisūtra), merely by knowing which one is freed from the bondage of phenomenal existence. (24cd-25)

The venerable (goddess) Kubjikā said:

O Lord of the gods, I will tell (you) a very lucid path to liberation. You should keep it extremely hidden and it should not be given to (just) anybody. (26)

The Sixteen Mata Tantras

(The Mata Tantras are): the Picumata Tantra, the Siddhayogeśvarīmata Tantra, the Śivādūtīmata Tantra, the Vāmeśvarīmata Tantra, the Sundarīmata Tantra, the Ratnasundarikāmata Tantra, the Mātṛmata Tantra, the Rūpikāmata Tantra, the Sārasvatamata Tantra, the Maṇgalāmata Tantra, the Śikhottaramata Tantra, the fine Mālinīmata Tantra, the great Ambāmata[16] Tantra, the Khecarīmata Tantra, the Bhairavīmata Tantra, and the venerable Kulālikāmata Tantra.[17] The Matas (common to) the three lineages (oli) make a group of six * * * * * which is clear. (Then there are) the five independent (Tantras) concerning the Krama and the five causes (kāraṇa)[18] that are above - such are your sixteen Matas. (27-32ab)

Starting from the beginning up to the end of the Equal One (samanānta) they (each) pervade their own (corresponding) (metaphysical) principle. O Śambhu, established up to the end of the Equal One (samanā), (they are present) in all the spheres (of existence) (sakalāvaraṇa).[19] (32cd-33ab)

The Supreme Scripture

After that (comes) the Great Sound (mahacchabda). It is the teaching concerning the first pure group of six (ṣaṭkanirṇaya), which is the descent of the Hexad of the Supreme (parāṣaṭka)[20] which is beyond the six types (of Vedic syllables) (jāti).[21] Beyond the belly of Mahāmāyā, it always stands above the Tantra.[22] (33cd-34)

Of the lineages (uli), it is the Western Tradition, the arising of the Transmission (kramodaya) which is authoritative in itself. Beyond Māyā, it is the first emergence (prathamodaya) within (the Transmental) aspect (of the deity) which is above the Equal One. (35)

The descent (of the teaching) has taken place in the past within the division (of the tradition called) Manthānabhairava (the Churning Bhairava). It is the division beginning with `KĀ',[23] the ocean of truth, that has emerged from Śiva's Command (śāmbhavājñā), merely by knowing which (initiates attain) omniscience in every Age. (36-37ab)

The one who knows the methods prescribed in the three sections (of the Manthānabhairavatantra)[24] and the ritual (kriyā) of (its) four parts and is intent on the transmission (krama) (taught) in the division beginning with `KĀ', is one who awakens to the teaching (mata). (37cd-38ab)

The Sūtra concerning the Observance of the Rule (samayānuṣṭhānasūtra)[25]

One who does not have mantra or (know) the maṇḍala should be known to be one who has fallen from Yoga. (His practice is as ineffective) as a sky-flower. Devoid of the Wheel of the Command (ājñācakra)[26] and (Vāgbhava) the energy of the six (ṣoḍhāśakti),[27] he goes on living in the world of transmigration again (and again) and he does not quit it. (38cd-40ab)

One who is devoid of the Command of the Rule and has not offered wine (to the deity) in the prescribed way and is constantly indulging in worldy experience (bhuñjate), (eventually helplessly) suffers (bhuñjate) the (agony of the) three hells. (40cd-41ab)

One (who belongs to) the Rule (but), greatly deluded, cause the Transmission to be worshiped without having taken the three baths (at the three times of day) suffers (the pain of) the three hells. (41cd-42ab)

He who is devoid of the three Gāyatrī (mantras) (uttered at the three times of day), the Vidyā and Tadgraha and (considers himself to have mastered and be) beyond the maṇḍala generated from the six (parts), does not get out of the world of transmigration. (42cd-43ab)

He who belongs to a good lineage (uli) (but) does not worship the teacher's secret (deity) with the (prescribed) seed (syllables) remains in the world of transmigration and does not leave it. (43cd-44ab)

One who is not intent on the Krama (taught in the Manthānabhairavatantra of) the division beginning with `KĀ' and is devoid of the (sacred) chalk (khaṭikā)[28] (with which the grid of letters is drawn that is) the door (which gives access to the mantras) and is beyond the sixteen grids (prastāra) (of letters),[29] is not freed from (the lower levels of) responsability. (44cd-45ab)

O Śambhu, without having known the Convention of the Flower (puṣpasaṁketaka) that extends in due order from the Transmental (unmanā) up to Śrīnātha and Ciñciṇī, one is not liberated.[30] (45cd-46ab)

(This is) the Sūtra concerning the Observance of the Rule (samayānuṣṭhānasūtra).

The Consecration of Yoga: The Hierarchy of the Traditions and the Stages of Realisation[31]

Śrīnātha said:

How is liberation amongst the Buddhists and, O lord of the gods, amongst the Jains (ārahanta), the Vaiṣṇavas, the worshippers of the Sun (saura) and the Śaivites? How is it on the paths of the Right and the Left and in the Mālinī Kula? O goddess! how is the path to liberation in (the teaching of the) Trika? And (how is it) in the transmissions of the (goddess) Nityā? How is liberation in the (scripture) called Trikhaṇḍa (`the one having three sections')[32] and in Kālikā's Krama?[33] (46cd-48)

Liberation is indeed (to be found) in the tradition (āmnāya) of (the goddess) Amarikā (the Immortal One) and in the venerable Vakrikāmata. As there is no Krama, Mudrā or maṇḍala above it, then the will, which is perpetual pervasion, is said to be `with limit' (sāvadhi).[34] There, below are the traditions (āgama) (that are progressively inferior) up to the system (darśana) of the Buddhists. As (the latter corresponds to) the principle of the intellect, that liberation is not 'with limit'.[35] (49-51ab)

The (liberation) they possess (although) located within the tranquil Self is said to be limited (niravadhi). Those who are destroyed (and fall from the path) by being satisfied (with merely this level of attainment), arrogant with pride, are then reborn and the world of transmigration does not cease. One should always contemplate (the reality) within (the goddess) Kujā in this way as the essential nature of liberation. The consecration (abhiṣecana) of the Yoga of the embodied soul has thus been explained in brief. (51cd-53)

The Three Sticks

The venerable (goddess) Kaulinī said:

The answer to (this) question is extremely secret and hard to get even by the gods. (But) because of (my) love (for you) I will tell you (about this) Kaula (reality) which is free from doubt.[36] (54)

(The lowest level extends) from the Earth principle up to the Person. One should know that above that is Māyā. It is the pure Self of sattva (the quality of purity)[37] and is (located) in the sequence of the eight classes (of the letters of the alphabet). (55)

Above that is the Īśvara principle and above that (the principle of) Sadāśiva. Śiva, stainless (nirañjana), is above that, pervading the Sky (of pure consciousness) (vyomavyāpin). (56)

This is the Ocean, the Great Stick, the field of which (extends) from Śiva (up to) the Earth. Above that is the fivefold empowered (nature) (which extends) from the Resonance (dhvanirūpa) onwards, in due order, up to the Equal One (samanā). Such is the (second) Stick, the Great Arising (mahodaya). (57-58ab)

Beyond the units of energy (kalā) is supreme bliss which is the Master of the Sticks (daṇḍanāyaka), the third. (This) Stick is said to be Śiva's plane (śāṁbhava) and (its) form is Bhairava because it fills (all things) (bharaṇa). (58bcd-59ab)

Once one has known the Three Sticks in this way, (one realises) the (supreme) faultless (reality) above that and, having thus pervaded (all things), it abides tranquil, omniscient, omnipresent and supreme.[38] (59cd-60ab)

Liberation With and Without Limit

Liberation is said to be of two kinds. (There is one) `with limit', which is that of those who who know (the ultimate reality) that should be known. The other is the liberation that is `without limit'. It is (the state) of those who know the scriptures (jñāna) and (the correct performance and full experience of) ritual (kriyā). (60cd-61ab)

The first (type of liberation corresponds to the realisation of the true nature of) the principle of the Person and the second to the principle of Māyā. The third is Śuddha Vidyā (Pure Knowledge), the fourth is above Īśvara, the fifth is within Sadāśiva while the limit (avadhi) of the sixth (degree of) liberation is Śiva. The seventh is said to be within Power (śakti) and the eighth in the Equal One (samanā).[39] (61cd-63ab)

The eleventh (degree of) liberation (occurs) within the (goddess) Klinnā (the Wet One) and the twelfth within (the goddess) Trikhaṇḍā (Three Parts). The thirteenth (is attained) at the end of an Aeon (kalpānta) and the fourteenth at the beginning and end (of one). The fifteenth (takes place) within (the goddess) Kujā in the City of the Forty-two (syllable Vidyā).[40] (63cd-64)

The incomparable and supreme Vidyā of Six Letters (is located therein) and is the (aspect) without parts (niṣkalā). The sixteenth (energy of the Moon) (ṣoḍaśī) is said to be (within the aspect) which has parts (sakala) and that is extolled as (ultimate) liberation. (65)

She is established within (the liberated condition) without limit with (her) sixteen divisions. Supreme liberation (is attained) in the end of that when she dissolves away into the Void. (66)

She is the power which is the inner Void who, within the Void, has become emptiness. If one knows nothing, then she is said to be `with limit'.[41] (67)

Above that is Supreme Being, while the Supreme Plane is beyond (phenomemal) being. It is devoid of mantra, meditation, mudrā and the Krama. (68)

(Located at the ultimate) extremity of the supreme (reality), it is free of supports and all meditation. It is beyond the sacrificial rites, free of the divisions of the Point (bindubheda),[42] devoid of the three instruments (of mantra) and (of all that) should be taken up or abandoned. (69-70ab)

Free of being and non-being, it is devoid of the (various forms of) bliss (pertaining to the series of yogic) states. Waveless and supremely tranquil, it is the Bliss of Stillness (nirānanda),[43] free of support. It is the Supreme Void, the Great Void, the extremity of the supreme (reality), (in short) the Śāmbhava plane. (70cd-71)

The path to liberation is of two kinds, namely, With Form (sākāra) and Stainless (nirañjana). (The path) With Form developes increasingly upwards and does not reach an ultimate conclusion (niścaya). (72)

If (a sphere of reality does not) culminate in the Void, it is not free (and independent) (asvatantra).[44] How can it give supreme liberation if (it) does not terminate in the Void? (73)

The culmination (avadhi) of the tradition (anvaya) is (realised) within the Void, when the supreme, faultless (reality) has been attained, (that is,) when having taking the support of the knowledge (transmitted by the) tradition, the group of six of the Supreme (goddess) (parāṣaṭka) has been attained. (74)

O Maheśvara! Liberation is permanent to the degree in which one is born into the superior (reality) above (the other ones) on the Path of Mantra.[45] (This kind of liberation) is said to be 'with limit'.[46] (75)

Such is the liberation pertaining to 1) (the principle of the) Person and commencing with the Void. (Indeed), the Void is said to be that of the Person and 2) Māyā is its emptiness. (76)

Similarly, 3) Īśvara is the Void and the (principle of) 4) Sadāśiva is the Void. 5) Śiva is the omnipresent Void and 6) the End of Sound is (also) said to be the Void. (77)

7) The cause which is the Pervasive One (vyāpinī) is the Void. 8) The Equal One (samanā) is its emptiness. 9) The Void is said to be within Bhairava. 10) The Void is indeed the plane of Bhairavī. 11) The plane of the line of Heroes (virāvalī) is the Void and 12) the Kālikākrama is (its) emptiness. 13) The tradition of (the goddess) Amarikā (the Immortal) is the Void and 14) its emptiness is within (the goddess) Kujā. 15) The Void (of the goddess who is the Vidyā of) Forty-two (syllables) is established at the end of (the fettered soul's) wandering (saṁcara). 16) The supreme Void which, waveless, is the Śāmbhava (plane), is there above.[47] (78-80)

Free of mantra and Vidyā, it is devoid of (all that needs to be) taken up or abandoned. The culmination (avadhi) of (all) mantras is said to be at the extremity of (the goddess) Kujā (kujānta),[48] (where there is) no accumulation (saṁgraha) (of anything). (81)

Below that is (the form of liberation corresponding to the reality) `without limit'. When the relationship between the mantras (is ordered in such a way) that the subsequent one is higher than the preceding, (then) the sixfold Command is (realised to be) eminently supreme. (82)

The tranquil will is the (primal) cause which is the Void. This is clear teaching concerning the Void (śūnyāmnāya). Established with (its) sixteen divisions, it has no limit.[49] (83)

If a meditative state of being obtains, associated with mantra and Gesture, that form of liberation, which is constantly intent on the repetition of mantra and worship is `without limit'. It abides as the tranquil will that extends from the principle of the Person up to the (primal) cause. (84-85ab)

(The sphere of existence) that is said to lack autonomy (asvatantra)[50] is destroyed when meditation is abandoned (upon reaching the supreme state). Without abandoning mantra, it is hard to attain the tranquil (reality that is the goal) of those who desire liberation. (85cd-86ab)

That tranquil (reality) is the supreme Void, free of all constituent parts. Within Kula, that place (sthāna) is (where) meditation, Gestures and mantras have dissolved away. (86cd-87ab)

The group of five, namely, the rite of adoration, the repetition of mantra, the prescribed (rites), the (sacrificial) substance and attendance (on the diety), (also cease there) where the disturbance brought about by the Command comes to an end. The eight (yogic) powers (guṇa), including the ability to make oneself small at will (aṇima) and the rest, (the power of) flight, the piercing by means of concentration (dhāraṇāvedha), (every) sign of accomplishment (pratyaya), such as the (power to cause) explosions by gesturing (mudrāsphoṭa), the past, future and present, longevity - when and where (all this) does not exist, that liberation is unborn and eternal. (87cd-89)

The tranquil and stable (dhruva) (reality is attained) when desire ceases; where all things have dissolved away. (That is) said to be (the form of liberation) `with limit'. (It is the reality that is) free (svatantra) and omnipresent. (90)

If that which has been attained (is never again) abandonded (and lost) and nothing else at all exists, (one has attained reality) which is the power (prabhutva) of all living beings (expressed by) the two syllables `tran-' and `-quil' (śānta).[51] (91)

The rites (kriyā) of (the various) schools (darśana) operate at every step and, as long as one has reached only a certain level (tāvat) (literally, `this much'), the practice of mantras is required. (But) once the plane which is the extremity of the supreme (reality) (parānta) has been attained, the knower of action quits (the world of transmigration) (nivartate). (92-93ab)

The pervasive presence of knowledge and action is said to be `without limit' until the tranquil condition prevails once the (liberation) `with limit' has been attained. Devoid of that knowledge and action, the Śāmbhava plane is (located at the) extremity of (the goddess) Kujā. (93cd-94)

Again, the knowledge without end is obtained by means of the path of action. Tranquil knowledge is devoid of action - there is no meditation or rite of adoration. (95)

(The reality) beyond desire arises by practicing with knowledge of (inner) action (kriyājñāna). At the end (the liberation) of those who are intent on the path of the Siddhas should be known to be `with limit'. (96)

The power of the ladder (that leads to liberation) is understood (only) at the end of the Unborn. Without a ladder, liberation is hard to attain on the path of the Void. (The liberation) `with limit' has dissolved away at the end of the Krama within the Void. (97-98ab)

Stages of Realisation: The Hierarchy of Teachings

Just as a ball struck by the fist goes (up) into the vast (gahana) sky from that (place below), similarly, the adept resides on the plane beyond the bounds of scriptural injunction (nirācāra) at the end of the liberation `with limit' by virtue of (his) deceitful practice (mithyācāra) (by which he cheats bondge). (98cd-99)

Or else, just as a Karkaṭa plant creeps (upwards) from the root to the top of the branches (of a tree), similarly, once (the initiate) has obtained the venerable Śrīkrama, he (goes on) to reach the extremity of the supreme (reality). (100)

The adept who knows all the states of being should gradually ascend in stages from the Buddhist path onwards to the top, even if (this takes place) in the course of many lives. (101)

Once attained the plane of (the goddess) Kujā's tradition, he dissolves away at the extremity of the supreme (reality). He does not return again below, life after life. (102)

He whose action and every (teaching) from (that of) the Buddhist scriptures up to the Kulālikamata has ceased by the mutual conjunction (yoga) of (their) qualities, (all) his (remaining) action ceases once obtained the plane (of liberation) `with limit'. The reciter of mantra is mounted on action to this extent (as is the) Karkaṭa plant according to the maxim of the tree (and the creeper entwined around it). (In short), once attained the plane beyond mantra, one should then abandon scripture. (103-105ab)

(The aspect) 'with form' is destroyed by the sequence of the five Gestures. The two lettered (word) 'mukti' (i.e. liberation) (refers to the reality) of the tranquil (aspect) without form. Once know the essence (of the deity) with form (sakala) * * * * one should abandon (it). (105cd-106)

Pervasion in the supreme, tranquil and flawless (reality) is not (achieved) in one lifetime. The path to liberation beyond this (is formed) by the prescribed method, namely, the pervasion of (all) the scriptures (in such a way that every scripture marks a place along the path). (107)

Once known correctly by means of the prescribed method, (the adept) then moves along the upper path. Buddhist liberation corresponds to the plane of the intellect, (that of the) Jains, the three qualities. (108)

Fundamental Nature (is the highest level) of those who adhere to the Veda and know the four Vedas. (The principle) of the Person is the supreme plane (pada) for the votaries of the Sun and and the followers of the Sāṁkhya. (109)

The principle of Māyā is the supreme level for (the Pāśupatas) who carry a club in (their) hands as a weapon. The Vidyā consisting of pure knowledge is the supreme plane for the Vaimala (Pāśupatas). (110)

Īśvara's plane is supreme for those who know the doctrine (veda) of the eight authorities (pramāṇa) and, well versed in the teachings (artha) of Lākula, are (dedicated) to the Pāśupata vow. (111)

The Śiva principle is the supreme plane for those who know the scriptures of the Nine Nityās. Above (these) are the (Praṇavas, that is, the) five causes. Having abandoned (these also), Bhairava is (attained) above (them). (112)

Eternal bliss is the supreme plane of the Tāntrikas who follow the Sāṣṭa Tantra.[52] (The reality) established in the (Tantras) of the right and the left is beyond the energy at the end of the Equal One. Liberation takes place according to the (place one is) in the serial order (of the teachings of the various schools). This is the truth and there is no doubt here (about this).[53] (113-114ab)

Above that comes Parāṣaṭka (the parts of which are) arranged in a hierarchy. The first division is the Six Spokes (ṣaḍāra), the second is the one called Bhairava, Vīrāvalī (the Line of Heroes) is the third, the fourth is the Kālikākula,[54] then comes the Primordial Descent (ādyāvatāra) and above it, Unstruck Sound.[55] (114cd-116ab)

Kulālikā's Scripture and its Divisions[56]

Now (I will talk about the scripture) called the venerable Kulālika according to the division of (its various) types (jātibheda).[57] (116cd)

1) Amongst them, the first division is devoid of the three Transmissions (krama).[58] 2) After that comes (tasya ūrdhve) the division beginning with `KĀ' the extent of which is seventy million (saptakoṭi) (verses). It is called the `collection of *Sūtra*s' and it has been brought down (into the world) by the First Lord (Ādinātha). It has emerged as the seventy million (verses) and is the main one of all the Tantras. (117-118)

3) The essence of that (is the scripture of) two and a half million (koṭipāda) (verses). 4) Then comes (the scripture consisting of) 125,000 verses. Amongst all the scriptures it is the (greatest) authority (pramāṇa) and is particularly special in the Western Tradition. (119)

5) I have brought down (to earth) for you the great Kulālikāmata.[59] It is, in short, the arising of the Transmission (kramodaya) and it stands above the Sacred Seat of Gesture (mudrāpīṭha). Beyond mantra and Vidyā, it is free of the types (jātibheda)[60] and the sphere of rajas and it is free of all (forms of) meditation, the practice of Tantra (tantrācāra) and it has authority in the three Lineages (oli). The essence of the essence, it is like clarified butter taken from the milk (of the scriptures). (120-122)

The scripture numbering twenty-four (thousand verses) is the root. It has come down through the transmission of the root tradition (mūlānvayakrama). (Consisting of) three sections (khaṇḍa), it is the Parāṣaṭka (Parā's Group of Six) and is sustained by a special Command. (123)

(This is) the teaching of the Great Transmission (mahākrama), luminous (saṁkāśa) with the Lineage (santāna) of the Siddhas. (It is the teaching) of the pure Siddha who resides at the end of the Full Moon. (124)

Extracted in the First Sacred Seat, it is beyond the sixteen grids (prastāra) (of letters). That is the Neuter (absolute), said to be the Śāmbhava (plane) with (its) secret.[61] It is the best of all paths beginning, in due order, with the Buddhist. (125-126ab)

The Hierarchy of Scripture and Teachings

The Mālinīvijaya (Tantra) was created first of all, (and then the others) up to the scripture (concerning the) Neuter (absolute). They have arisen individually, in each of their (various) categories (of scriptures). The liberation of (those) sages who belong to the Kula tradition is in (accord with their) own level (of attainment) (svasthāna). Once the (teaching of) Kujā's tradition has been attained, the supreme merger (occurs) at the end of (all the) levels in the case of one who is intent on the Great Transmission on this path of liberation `with limit'. (126cd-128)

(The forms of liberation corresponding to the various schools) are arranged in an ascending hierarchy, (as follows):[62] the Buddhist, Jain and Vedic (form of liberation), that of the Sun worshippers, the Sāṁkhya, the Vaiṣṇava, (that of the) Vow of Yoga, the Vimala, the great Pāśupata, the Śaiva and the (liberation that is achieved by applying the) teaching of the group of eight Bhairava (scriptures) which is a special (Śaiva teaching), and (then) finally, (the teaching of the Tantras of the goddess) Kujā which is the Parāṣaṭka, the Hexad of the Supreme (goddess). (129-130)

(At the bottom is) the Buddhist scripture, (then comes that of) the Jainas and then the Vaidika school (darśana). The Saura (scripture of those who worship the Sun) is higher than the Vedic. Higher than the Saura (scripture) is the Sāṁkhya, the Vaiṣṇava and the Yogaśāstra, which is of many kinds. Above that is (the Pāśupata scripture concerning) the Great Vow (mahāvrata). After that comes that the essence of the Vimala (school of the Pāśupatas) and the eight authorities (pramāṇa)[63] of the Lākula (Pāśupata). Then the Pāśupata is said (to come next) after which comes the Śaiva (scripture), which is of many kinds. (131-133ab)

Higher than that (the scripture of) Svacchanda, who is (both) formless (niṣkala) and with form (sakala), (also called) Bahurūpa, Aghorīśa, Vyādhibhakṣa (the Devourer of Disease) Bhairava, Candragarbha, and Vijñāna. (After Svacchanda's scriptures come those of) Tumburu and Amṛteśvara and (then), in due order, comes Trika (ṣaḍardha) which is the Mālinīvijayakula. Above that (comes) the Yoga of the tradition of (the Goddess) Klinnā (the Wet One), beyond that is the supreme plane. Another is the tradition of the Vīrāvalī Kula and the Kālikākrama. Then (comes) the Door of Kula (Kulakapāṭa), which is the first teaching of the Path (adhvānaśāsana).[64] (133cd-136)

मुक्तिसंग्रहसूत्राधिकारो[५५१] नामानन्दः ॥ ६८ ॥

Then, in the same way, comes the tradition of the (goddess) Kujā, the pure Kaula (tradition that has been revealed) for the benefit (of the world). Above it is the Bliss of Stillness (nirānanda), (denoted by) the two syllables 'tran-' and '–quil' (śānta).[65] (137)

(That is) the eternal Śāmbhava liberation, free of the net of action and devoid of (any) teaching concerning mantra * * * * * * the universal state (sarvāvasthā) will prevail once (it) has been attained. (138-139ab)

One should reach the culmination of the supreme (level of existence) (parānta) by constantly (and progressively) abandoning the mantras starting (with those of) the Buddhist scripture up to the Neuter, which is (the tradition) beginning with `KĀ'. The unique feature of liberation in this (tradition) is that it is the nondual (reality) at the very end, which is above (all others). (139cd-140)

This is the Sūtra of the Compendium of Liberation. There is nothing higher than the division beginning with `KĀ'. One knows (what true) liberation is having learnt it by means of the scriptural tradition; not in any other way. (141)

* * * * * (?) the light in the venerable Vakrikāmata. There is nothing higher than this: this is the Command of the Supreme Goddess. (143)

This is the (sixty-eighth) chapter named concerning the Sūtra of the Compendium of Liberation. It belongs to the primordial descent into the great sacrifice of the Churning Bhairava in the tradition (anvaya) that consists of seventy million (verses) that has emerged on the Path of Meru and (extends) for one hundred and twenty-five thousand (verses). It has been brought (down to earth) into the first sacred seat along the path of the Seat of Knowledge (vidyāpīṭha). It is the ultimate purport of the Subsequent Six Thousand (verses) of the Pure Division (vimalabhedottaraṣaṭka) in the division beginning with `KĀ' in the venerable scripture of twenty-four thousand (verses) (known as) the Svāminīmata of the Supreme Lord's command as uttered within the Transmission of the Mother (ambākrama).

CHAPTER SIXTY-NINE

Conclusion

The Siddhas, the Time of their Attainment and their Sacred Seats

Śrīnātha said:

O Mistress of the gods, you are my teacher (of the Tantra) and I am yours with regards to the reflection (vicāraṇa) (on its meaning). Neither Rudra, Bhairava, the Heroes or anyone (else) possess this Command. (All this has been) revealed (to me) by virtue of your compassionate friendship towards me.[1] (1-2ab)

The venerable (goddess) Vakrā said:

Then the god was permitted to receive the Command and the Great Transmission of the Aged (mahāvṛddhakrama) was given to Śrīkaṇṭha in the Kṛta Age during a Prabhava year[2] in the month of Śrāvaṇa on the eighth of the dark lunar fortnight. (2cd-3)

Then the descent of the Lineage of the Child (bāla oli) took place again in the Tretā Age. O Lord of the gods, (this is) the grace (given to) Durvāsa and Oḍḍīśa. The immortal transmission of Oḍa, which is the lucid (teaching of) the Vīrāvalīkrama, was given to him in the beneficial year of Pramoda[3] on the eighth day of the dark lunar fortnight of the (month of) Vaiśākha. (4-5)

In the Dvāpara Age, the Command, which is grace, was also given to Ṣaṇmukha (Kārttikeya - the Six Faced One) (in the form of) the Vow called Kaumāra during the lunar asterism of Śrīvatsa on the eighth day of the dark lunar fortnight in the month of Caitra. (In this way the teaching has) descended into the Middle Lineage (madhyamoli) in each (Dvāpara) Age and was learnt by Ṣaṣṭhanātha.[4] (6-7abc)

Then again in the Age of Strife, that Command belongs to Nandirudra[5] and grace (was given to) Caryānātha. (Then) correctly and in accord with the Transmission of the Aged, the Command spontaneously gives rise to the descent (of the teaching) into the Lineage of the Aged in this way within the transmission of the three lineages. (8-9ab)

The fourth (descent) is common to all and is located on the plane without parts (niraṁśa). O Lord, (it is) the Vīrāvalīkrama (the Transmission of the Line of Heroes).[6] Such is the Fourfold Transmission (kramacatuṣṭaya). (9cd-10ab)

In the future, at the end of the (Age of) Strife there will certainly be a fifth Lord (nātha). (His coming will take place) in the year (called) Kṣaya[7] on the fourteenth (of the dark lunar fortnight) on Śiva's Night. Having transmitted the Command to the venerable Piṅgala Rudra, who is Mataṅgīśa, the Transmission of the Skyfarer (khecara) was also given to him. (10cd-12ab)

(This is) the Root Tradition (mūlānvaya), the essence (of it all) that has emerged from the Divine Liṅga. At the end of the Age all the tradition (anvaya) will arise in the Lineage (oli) of the Liṅga.[8] (12cd-13ab)

Out of the five Lords of the Ages, the First Lord (ādinātha) is Bhairava. He is the Lord of the gods (who delight in) the bliss of Navātman, the Lord of the lords of the king of Vidyās. (13cd-14ab)

The venerable Kujeśa, born from the Great Self by the will of the venerable (goddess) Kujā is (the Bhairava) called Kucandraśekhara who has emerged from the extremity of the Equal One (samanā).[9] (14cd-15ab)

O Mother of Kula! This is the descent onto the Island of the Moon (of the god who) is united (with you) (utsaṅgāvatāra). The Lord of the Will (icchānātha) abides (thus) as one (accompanied) by the five Siddhas of the Command. (15cd-16ab)

Kāmarūpa

Three amongst them are established in authority in the three lineages (oli). This, the Lord (bhagavat) Śrīkaṇṭha who feels loving friendship (maitrībhāva) (towards the goddess and the world)[10] in the Kṛta Age, is the one who resides in Kāmarūpa in order to save living beings.[11] (16cd-17)

Jālandhara

Purandara is the Lord (bhagavat) Oḍunātha[12] in the Tretā Age who resides in (the sacred seat of) Jālandhara and bestows accomplishment (siddhi) to the Heroes. (18)

Pūrṇagiri

The venerable Kumāra is the Lord (bhagavat) Ṣaṣṭhanātha in the Dvāpara (Age) who resides in Pūrṇagiri and bestows success in Yoga to (true) yogis. (19)

Oḍḍiyāna

O Lord of the gods, Nandirudra is Caryānātha (the teacher) in the Age of Strife who resides in the venerable (seat of) the letter OṀ[13] and bestows liberation and worldly enjoyment. (20)

Tisra

He who went to the southern quarter in the House of the venerable City of the Moon at the end of the Age is Piṅgala who is the very powerful Mataṅgīśa. He is the fifth leader (nāyaka) of the Siddhas who, at (the goddess's) Command, (resides) in the sacred seat (called) Tisra. (21-22ab)

Candra

Kucandraśekharānanda, the bliss of the universe, (resides) in the sacred seat of the Moon. All pervasive, he is Navātman who is established (there) from beginningless aeons.[14] (22cd-23ab)

The current of Siddhas, beginning with the venerable Mitranātha, has emerged from the Island of the Moon.[15] The lineage (santāna) of Siddhas in the (Tradition of the) West, is devoid of the previous lineage (pūrvasantāna).[16] O god, it has (arisen) in the last (paścima) Age when the kingdom of the barbarians is in the north. (23cd-24)

When other teachers and (their) disciples have come under the sway of greed and delusion and the penetration of the Command (ājñāveśa) has ceased and authority come to an end,[17] I will descend into the fifth lord of the sacred seat. (25-26ab)

The Siddha there is Mataṅgīśa who is accompanied by the venerable (goddess) Mātaṅgī. There will be a great rite of adoration beginning from there in the fourth (Age). (26cd-27ab)

The Scripture of Twenty-four Thousand Verses

I have spoken this truth in the venerable Section Concerning the Virgin Goddess (consisting of) six thousand verses (which is a part of the scripture of) twenty-four thousand (verses), the best of Matas.[18] (27cd-28ab)

In the beginning comes the Section Concerning the Virgin Goddess. The Accomplished Section (Siddhakhaṇḍa) is the second one. The third is the First Section (Ādikhaṇḍa) and, O pervasive one, there are four parts (pāda) in due order.[19] (28cd-29ab)

This is the Tree of the goddess Kubjikā, namely, (the scripture of) twenty-four thousand (verses). It was placed in the hands of King Śeṣa to serve as the cause (of liberation). (29cd-30ab)

The goddess has said: "I will give the one who correctly understands this (my) grace and (the initiation by) piercing endowed with the Command." (30cd-31ab)

This scripture should (only) be given to one when (his) ability (to grasp and apply it) has become clearly evident. The king of the snakes sustains it with (his) head in accord with the orders (given to him by the goddess). (31cd-32ab)

Then, O Bhairava, in order to grace and save the devotees (of the goddess), Siddhanātha, the god of all (viśvadeva), brought it into the great seat of the letter OṀ adorned with Siddhas and Yoginīs. The powerful Yoginī, Kanakamañjarī by name, (also) placed knowledge in that House in accord with the Rule. (32cd-34)

The Wick of the Navel is the female serpent and the Conjuction of the Thunderbolt (vajrasandhi) of the two door panels.[20] The Kula scripture should be given to one who knows the conventions here also. Otherwise it should not be given - this is the Command of the Supreme Goddess. (35-36ab)

The venerable Section Concerning the Virgin (Goddess) is finished. It belongs to the primordial descent into the great sacrifice of the Churning Bhairava in the tradition (anvaya) that consists of seventy million (verses) that has emerged on the Path of Meru and (extends) for one hundred and twenty-five thousand (verses). It has been brought (down to earth) into the first sacred seat along the path of the Seat of Knowledge (vidyāpīṭha). It is the ultimate purport of the Subsequent Six Thousand (verses) of the Pure Division (vimalabhedottaraṣaṭka) in the division beginning with `KĀ' in the venerable scripture of twenty-four thousand (verses) (known as) the Svāminīmata of the Supreme Lord's command as uttered within the Tradition of the Mother (ambākrama).

The scripture (mata) of the Supreme Lord (pārameśvara) extends for a million million (verses) (lakṣakoṭi). The essence extracted from this extends for seventy million verses (saptakoṭi). The essence of the (scripture of) seventy million (verses consists of) one hundred and twenty-five thousand quarter (verses). The essence of that is (the scripture of) twenty-four thousand verses. It was revealed by (the goddess) Kujeśī to Mitra in three sections.

May the Kula Yoginīs rejoice! May the sons of Kula rejoice! May the teachers of Kula rejoice and all others who have been initiated into the Kula!

128. क्, ग्: कच– The passage from here to 48/43ab appears twice in the MSs of the SKh. It appears first in manuscript K (SKh 1/99cd-101ab, 102-109ab = KuKh 48/33cd-42ab) and then again in all the manuscripts as part of chapter five of the SKh which corresponds to KuKh 48/2-45. The former readings are labelled SKh 1, the latter SKh 5. The former appearance seems to be the result of a scribal error as the passage is found in only one of the three manuscripts. Moreover, it is out of context and is incomplete. Even so, surprisingly, the readings there agree with the manuscripts of the KuKh more closely than in the latter. 129. IM 5 + 6. 130. NOTES OF THE TRANSLATION OF CHAPTER FORTY-EIGHT

1. The passage up to verse 45 is also found in the Siddhakhaṇḍa (KuKh 48/2-45 = SKh 5/26-71; see notes to the Sanskrit text and concordance for details). In the SKh it is introduced with the statement that this is another teaching concerning the Kramasūtra. The passage that precedes it there concludes with the statement: 'the Kramasūtra that has come down through the transmission of the root lineage has been explained.' (kramasūtraṁ samākhyātaṁ mūlānvaya-kramāgatam | SKh 5/25ab). However, at the beginning of that passage it is referred to as the 'Pūjākhaṇḍa' (athāntaraṁ pūjākhaṇḍaṁ prārabhyate tad yathā | ibid. 5/1cd). Thus, the Pūjākhaṇḍa of the SKh consists of two Kramasūtras. The first part of the second one corresponds to verses 2 to 45 of this chapter.

Again, according to the colophon of the entire passage of the SKh, containing both Kramasūtras, it is called the Daśaughakramanirṇayasūtra, just as the following one is called Dvādaśaughanityakramasūtra. It ends with the statement: O Śambhu, he who knows this Kramasūtra is a (true) teacher (kramasūtram idaṁ śambho yo jānāti sa deśikaḥ [g: deśika] || ibid. 5/123cd). As the whole chapter is called the Kramasūtra, it appears that initially this was all that it contained and that the Sūtra of the Teaching (upadeśasūtra), which begins with verse 50 and continues to the end, was added later.

Here, in our text, the goddess declares that she will expound the Sūtra of the Rite of Adoration (pūjāsūtra), which is the name of the first long section of the SKh that deals with ritual procedure. Thus the SKh (1/1ab) begins: Now I will tell (you) the teaching of the Pūjāsūtra. (athātaḥ [g: aṁthātaḥ] saṁpravakṣyāmi pūjāsūtrasya nirṇayam [g: nirnarṇṇayaṁ] |)

The reason for this cross-identification is probably due to the version of the SKh that the redactor used as his source. Of the three MSs of the SKh that have been recovered, MS K repeates a part of this passage towards the beginning of the SKh (see details in the notes to the Sanskrit edition). It is possible that the manuscript of the SKh with which the redactor of the KuKh was working included the Kramasūtra in the place it is found in MS K, that is, inserted in the Pūjāsūtra. Note also that the Sanskrit of the first line of the verse we are examining, which contains the reference to the Pūjāsūtra, is clumsy and not quite correct. This may well be because the redactor mistakenly thought that the Kramasūtra was the Pūjāsūtra and altered his text accordingly. Note also that the first part of chapter 50 below, which is called Śrīkramasūtra, and the second half of chapter 49 (from about verse 50 onwards) are embedded in the continuation of the second Kramasūtra of the SKh. The entire section of the SKh corresponding to the first half of this chapter, the second half of the next and the first part of chapter 50 of our text is a single coherent whole. On the other hand, the text here is unclear in places due to the omission of extra lines found in the SKh. One can surmise therefore, that the original source is the SKh or possibly a common source, but this seems to be less likely.

Thus, it appears that the redactor of this part of the KuKh chose to construct a variant form of the older Kramārcana taught in the Kramasūtras of the SKh that is presented in this chapter and in chapter fifty. Another sūtra has been inserted between them, which is largely dedicated to a description of the goddess's iconic form and its inner equivalents. The SamP, which quotes almost all of it, calls it the Dhyānasūtra, which is indeed the name of chapter forty-nine of our text. The first three lines here, not found in the SamP, introduce the subject of this chapter as the 'inner mental sacrifice'. Integrating this sūtra with the Kramasūtra which is the substance of the aforementioned parts of chapters 48 to 50 the redactor implicitly presents it as the inner part of the Kramārcana described in the Kramasūtra.

Finally, we note that although more than half of the verses of the Kramasūtra found in the SKh appear in the KuKh, the procedure differs here in some details. These differences are due to additions to the text of the SKh and omissions from it and changes in the common parts which will be noted as we procede.

2. The form of the Circle of Teachers described here differs from the one in chapter twenty-seven (2cd-26ab) to which the reader is refered.

3. Varuṇa's quarter is the west (see above 36/107). The Circle of Varuṇa (varuṇamaṇḍala) is therefore the maṇḍala of the Western Tradition, that is, the Saṁvartāmaṇḍala. The officiant is facing east, so the lower corner of the downward facing triangle which is in the centre of the maṇḍala points west (cf. 11/24cd-25 and note). As we shall see, this can be worshipped, with the appropriate modifications, as both the Kramamaṇḍala and the Gurumaṇḍala – the Circle of the Teachers (cf. above 48/51ab). The text begins with an account of how the Circle of the Teachers should be drawn and worshipped.

After this line, instead of what follows up to 48/8ab the SKh reads:

Fashion the square of Vāsudeva who holds a severed head. Then, once the reciter of mantra has smeared it with liquor and the (Five) Praṇavas, he should place the sandalwood (there) with liquor and the usual (sāmānya) five (offerings).

muṇḍahastaṁ vāsudevaṁ caturasraṁ samuddharet |
upalipya tato mantrī alinā praṇavais tathā [k kh g: praṇaveṣu ca] ||
candanaṁ alinā sārdhaṁ sāmānyaiḥ pañcabhiḥ kṣipet | SKh 5/28-29ab

4. The term catuṣkaveśman is not recorded in Monier-William's dictionary. The noun catuṣka- in this context appears to be a technical term for the square, outer enclosure of a maṇḍala.

5. The reader is reminded that the form in which the Five Praṇavas appear in the KuKh is generally: AIṀ HRĪṀ ŚRĪṀ KHPHREṀ HSAUḤ.

6. The quarter verse that follows appears to be corrupt or spurious. At any rate it makes no sense to me. It reads: muṇḍaṁ ratnākaraṁ tridhā [gh: tathā] i.e. 'having cast into the centre of the maṇḍala, the severed head which is the sea three times.'

7. This verse is drawn from the ŚM (23/37). It is preceded by a presentation in code of Bhairava's syllable Navātman (i.e. HSKṢMLVRYŪṀ) which represents Bhairava as the First Teacher – Ādinātha. Bhairava declares in the line just before this verse (ŚM (23/36cd): 'O goddess, that is Navātmaka and the teacher in the three lineages (etan navātmakaṁ devi guruś ca triṣu oliṣu).

The following verses describe the formation of the Gurumaṇḍala. Although most of the passage is drawn from the SKh, the most important lines concerning this are drawn from chapter twenty-three of the ŚM. Note that the description of the Arghamaṇḍala – also called Akhaṇḍamaṇḍala (see 11/26-28ab ff.) – also draws some part from the Gurumaṇḍala described in ŚM 23 and another from ŚM 10. The Ṭīkā explains, that according to the procedure it is expounding, which is that of chapter twenty-three of the ŚM, Navātman is incorporated into the Gurumaṇḍala. The Kramamaṇḍala contains only the Five Praṇavas. Finally, the Ṭīkā (MS K, 120b) adds that this Gurumaṇḍala differs from the one described there before which is the common (sāmānya) one, that is, the one worshipped in the regular rite (nityavidhi). In that one the seed-syllables of the six sacred seats are projected into the calyx of each of the nine lotuses of the maṇḍala along with the permutations of Navātman. This Gurumaṇḍala is worshipped in the occasional (naimittika) rites on special occasions (parvan) (cf. 49/62cd-63ab). See note 18 to chapter 11 above and also intro. vol. 2, appendix 2 for the relevent portions of chapter 23 of the ŚM and the Ṭīkā concerning the Gurumaṇḍala.

8. The fivefold teacher is Śrīnātha, that is, Bhairava in the form the five teachers, known as the Five Siddhas or Nāthas (see above 25/41-43; 27/6-7ab, 27/17cd-19, 43/4-30 and KMT 3/94ab-110). The Five Praṇavas are also meant with which the Five Nāthas are worshipped in the maṇḍala.

9. According to the SKh one should place a flower in the Yoni in the center.

10. Cf. SKh 5/29ab quoted above in note to 48/3. The basic five offerings made to the maṇḍala are bodily substances called the Five Potions of Immortality. See KuKh chapter 29, note 30.

11. The Ṭīkā explains how the Five Praṇavas should be placed in the *maṇḍ*ala as follows:

The deposition of the Five Praṇavas comes first. How (is it)? (One should deposit them) like ramparts, (that is), as one does a house with four corners. The Five Praṇavas (are deposited in the four intermediate directions i.e. the corners) beginning with the north-east and ending with the north-west. That is the house, which is a mansion, and such is the deposition in the manner of ramparts.

12. See above note to 11/26-28ab.

13. These lines appear in the ŚM (as 23/38cd-40ab) in a long section that describes the Gurumaṇḍala and the mantras that should be deposited in it. They are quoted in the Ṭīkā (MS K fl 87b), which refers to them as the Gurumaṇḍalasūtra. The Ṭīkā comments extensively on this sūtra, thereby describing the procedure set out in the ŚM. See intro. vol. 2, appendix 2 for a detailed presentation.

This sūtra is so basic that it is also quoted in the SKh. It would have been well known to learned adepts and teachers who, seeing these lines would have known the procedure to which they allude. This is based on the deposition of the letters of Navātman – HSKṢMLVRYŪṀ in nine lotuses of the Gurumaṇḍala. The last line is missing here that is required to complete the prescription for the deposition of all nine letters. In the original source this is, as one would expect, ŪṀ. However, here AIṀ takes its place in the centre of the maṇḍala and so this line has been omitted. See below, note to 48/20-21ab.

14. SKh (5/37cd-38ab) adds:

Vaṭukeśvara, the Guardian of the Field – Kṣetrapāla – is worshipped in the 'south' i.e on the right and Yoginī in the 'north' i.e. on the left (cf. 48/22cd-24).

vāruṇaṁ bindusaṁyuktaṁ satripādaṁ sabindukam [g: tu viṁdukaṁ] ||
vāyutattvaṁ tathāvasthaṁ vaṭukasya [kh: vaṭakasya] tu yoginī ||

15. The SKh (5/38cd-40ab) reads the following four lines in the place of this and the following one:

The seat has been explained. In front is the group of five maṇḍalas. The measure of five finger spans, one should deposit (there) the group of five seats. The maṇḍala of the Mudrāpīṭha is separate and (is formed) by the division of the seed-syllables. Triangular (triprakāra), one should fashion it with liquor in the western quarter.

āsanaṁ tu samākhyātaṁ agre maṇḍalapañcakam ||
pañcāṅgulapramāṇena nyaset [kh: nyased] āsanapaṁcakaṁ [g:

sāmānyapañcakam] ||
pṛthag bījavibhāgena mudrāpīṭhasya maṇḍalam [g: ?] ||
triprakāraṁ [g: ?] tu alinā kārayet paścimāṁ diśām [g: disā] ||

16. According to SKh 5/41cd this line says: The one called Haṁsa conjoined with Śakti along with the (vowel) at the end of the thirteen and the Point.

haṁsākhyaṁ śaktisaṁyuktaṁ trayodaśāntena bindunā |

The thirteenth vowel is AI, which along with bindu makes AIṀ. The following two lines, which are also drawn from the SKh, were probably taken from the ŚM. The coincidence of the text here and elsewhere with the ŚM indicates that the Kramasūtra of the SKh and its description of the Gurumaṇḍala is strongly influenced by it. Even so, AIṀ is the syllable in the centre, whereas according to the ŚM it is, as one would expect, ŪṀ, the last letter of Navātman. So we read there (ŚM 23/40cd): The letter ŪṀ is in the centre (thus) one should worship the Gurumaṇḍala (ūkāraṁ madhyadeśe tu pūjayed gurumaṇḍalam ||)

17. Temples represent Kailāsa, the mountain at the centre of the universe. This floats in the cosmic ocean sustained on the back of the cosmic tortoise. The tortoise seat meant here is the Point in the centre of the Gurumaṇḍala, which analogously 'sustains' the maṇḍala (see 57/87cd-88 and note). It is in the middle surrounded by eight others. Thus, altogether the Gurumaṇḍala is adorned with nine maṇḍalas. See intro. vol. 2, appendix 2.

The ŚM reads these lines as follows:

The letter ŪṀ should be worshipped in the middle within the Gurumaṇḍala (Thus) the Gurumaṇḍala, which is (common to all) the three Lineages (oli), has been explained. O fair lady, the Gurumaṇḍala is adorned with nine maṇḍalas.

ŚM 23/40cd-41.

18. SKh 1/62 reads as does KuKh 48/21cd-22ab. SKh 5/43 reads: Placing water, cooked rice, liquor, flowers, perfume, incense and meat, the libation (argha), lamp and the vessel in the left hand . . .

toyodanamalīpuṣpaṁ (kh: tatrodanama-) gandhadhūpapalaṁ (kh: -phalaṁ) tathā |

19. SKh 1/63ab: The Gesture of the Stick is in the right hand to the right of Vaṭuka.

20. Cf. SKh 5/44cd (there is no equivalent in the corresponding passage in SKh 1): In the north (it is offered) to the Yoginīs in the course of the gathering of the practice of the rule.

21. SKh (5/45cd): having made two animal offerings and then rinsed the mouth facing away (from the maṇḍala).

22. SKh: Rudraśakti.

23. SKh: once one has encapsulated (it) with the two hands.

24. The upward movement burns and the downward movement nourishes. The two processes of burning and nourishing are mentioned above in 13/104.

25. SKh 'with the three parts (of the mantra) (tripāda)'.

26. This and the following sentence is replaced in the SKh (5/48cd-49ab) by: After that one should move the Weapon, which is (like) millions of moons, (around the maṇḍala). Piṅgalā's Gesture is fiery and bears Piṅgalā's Command.

27. Dharma and Adharma is the characteristic of Karma (see above 13/80cd-81).

28. The lotus is the Wheel of the Self-supported.

29. SKh 5/50cd-51ab (= SKh 1/80): There, in the centre, is the Great Goal. Extract this, the wheel of a hundred million. It is brilliant like the noonday sun. In the middle is Śakti who is (the energy of) Unstruck Sound (anāhatā).

30. See above, note 24.

31. Concerning the following series of depositions of the goddess's faces and limbs on the hands and the body see above 10/14 ff..

32. The deposition begins by mentally placing the Command, that is, Vāgbhava, the syllable AIṀ, between the two clenched fists. Then the faces are deposited on the fingers and parts of both hands. The same is then done with the six limbs (Cf. above 10/14 ff. and notes). The deposition of the faces begins with the front of the hand and moves progressively to the little finger. The limbs begin with the thumb and move progressively to the back of the hand. Thus one first moves forward from the front of the hand to the little finger for the deposition of the heads. Then, for deposition of the limbs, one returns to the thumb and moves forward again to the back of the hand which is where the Armour, the last limb, is normally deposited (48/42). In this way the two depositions conclude with the Armour, which corresponds to the uppermost face, and so the sequence of the faces turns two complete cycles beginning and ending, appropriately, with the uppermost face, which is that of the goddess Parā.

Upper Face	End of Energy – Principle of the Command (between the eyebrows)*
Head	Head
Eastern face / Wheel	Face
Southern face	Heart
Northern face	Genitals
Western face	Two feet

*The Command is normally said to be between the eyebrows where the Wheel of the Command is located. Presumably that is the case here also.

34. See KuKh chapter 10, note 20 for the six limbs of the goddess.

35. SKh (5/67-68) adds:

One should perform the visualization in accord with the arrangement (of the parts of the goddess's body) and practice it with the Gesture of the Yoni. The entire sequence of the rite of adoration (pūjākrama) is present there as it is established. There are five offerings for the five seats (āsana). Authority is mounted on the seat of the syllable AIṀ along with Māyā.

36. The corresponding section in the SKh (5/26-71) ends here. The following is the continuation found in the SKh (5/72-80ab) up to the verse corresponding to KuKh 50/4cd-11ab (omitting KuKh 50/1-4ab). Note that the Samayā Vidyā to which this passage refers is the Bṛhadsamayā also called the Trikhaṇḍā Vidyā in three parts (khaṇḍa) (see below, note to 48/85cd-86).

After that one should deposit the current of the six in the manner enjoined and in due order. The Heart of the vessel for the liquor should be deposited above the Head. The Goddess Topknot belongs to incense, the Armour to the sandal wood. One should deposit the Eye of the flowers and the Weapon of the water. After that one should deposit the Samayā (Vidyā) of authority and the Stutikhaṇḍa on the seat (āsana) by moving in an anti-clockwise direction. Moving anti-clockwise deposit the Mātṛkhaṇḍa on the girdle (mekhalā) and the Mantrakhaṇḍa along with the Samayā Bhairavī (Vidyā) in the middle of the womb (of the maṇḍala). Having formed the Gesture of the Yoni, which is supreme, imagine it to be within the Triangle.

One should purify the vessel (upaskaraṇa) of the goddess with the Gesture of the Cow. Grasping it with effort, one should worship the Kulāgama. The Mudrāpīṭha comes first. (Then), in due order, the Mantrapīṭha is the second and the Vidyāpīṭha is the third of the (pīṭhas) of the (basic) common (sāmānya) (Tantras). The knower of Kaula should worship the Kulālyambāmata in the Cīñciṇī Kula, which is common (to all the Kubjikā schools), with the Vidyārājeśvara (mantra) in the three sacred seats. One should worship the Gurumaṇḍala with flowers along with perfume and libations five times in the midst of the directions and then Olinātha (the Lord of the Lineages).

37. Entries 5 and 6 corresponds to the following two lines in the KMT (17/82cd-83ab):

The twelve-limbed and the six-limbed – this is the body which is Kula. The Five Jewels are in the forehead, throat and chest, the genitals and the feet

dvādaśāṅga[ṁ] ṣaḍaṅgaṁ ca etad dehaṁ kulātmakam ||
lalāṭakaṇṭhavakṣasthaṁ guhyāṅghrau ratnapañcakam |

Concerning these six depositions see above 1) 18/25ff 2) 19/1ff. 3) 20/1ff. 4) 21/1ff. 5) ? 6) 24/105 ff. The Five Jewels are the subject of chapter sixty-two below. See also the Nyāsasūtra in the beginning of the SKh summarized in appendix I of vol. 3 of the edition and translation. KuKh 48/46cd-49 correspond to KMT 17/82-84.

38. The long Trikhaṇḍā Vidyā of 292 syllables, also called Tadgraha, is said to be the goddess's Brahminical thread. It extends along the length of her body and is marked by a series of sixteen knots. The Knots are listed with some of their locations on the deity's body in the KMT (17/71-76). The complete deposition of the Sixteen Knots is found in the SKh (MS G fl. 11a-11b).

A mantra corresponds to each Knot. The first is as follows:

1) HRAṀ 2) A 3) O 4) ANANTĀYAI 5) ANANTAGRANTHAYE 6) HRAṀ 7) PĀDAPĀRŚVAYOR VIVARĀṆGULIṢU |

Each of these sixteen mantras contains progressively one of the sixteen vowels which is in position 2). It is added, along with the nazalizing anusvāra, to the base – HR – of the syllable in position 1) and 6). Position 3) is occupied by a syllable drawn from the names of the four main sacred seats. These are: 1) O 2) JĀ 3) PŪ 4) KĀ 5) ḌḌI 6) LA 7) RṆṆA 8) MA 9) YĀ 10) NDHA 11) GI 12) RŪ 13) ṆA 14) RA 15) RI 16) PA. This is followed in position four by the name of the energy of the Knot in the dative and then the name of the Knot, which is also in the dative. Finally, at the end, the location of the Knot is stated in the locative. The KMT mentions only the name of the Knot and, in some cases, its location. The deposition according to the SKh is as follows:

1) Sides of the feet: HRAṀ A O ANANTĀYAI ANANTAGRANTHAYE HRAṀ ||
2) Ankles: HRĀṀ Ā JĀ KALĀYAI KĀLAGRANTHAYE HRĀṀ ||
3) Shanks: HRIṀ I PŪ RAUDRYĀYAI RUDRAGRANTHAYE HRIṀ ||
4) Knees: HRĪṀ Ī KĀ JYEṢṬHĀYAI JYEṢṬHĀGRANTHAYE HRĪṀ ||
5) Thighs: HRUṀ U ḌḌI VĀMĀYAI (Kh: OḌI AVVĀYAI) VĀMAGRANTHAYE HRUṀ ||
6) Genitals: HRŪṀ Ū LA KĀMĀYAI KĀMAGRANTHAYE HRŪṀ ||
7) Hips: HRṚṀ Ṛ RṆṆA PIṄGALĀYAI PIṄGALAGRANTHAYE HRṚṀ ||
8) Knot of Brahmā: HRṚṀ Ṛ MA BRAHMĀYAI BRAHMAGRANTHAYE HRṚṀ ||
9) Navel: HRḷṀ ḷ YĀ SOMĀYAI SOMAGRANTHAYE HRḷṀ ||
10) Heart: HRḶṀ Ḷ NDHA SŪRYĀYAI SŪRYAGRANTHAYE HRḶṀ ||
11) Chest: HREṀ E GI PRĀṆĀYAI PRĀṆAGRANTHAYE HREṀ ||
12) Throat: HRAIṀ AI RŪ VIṢṆUJĪVĀYAI VIṢṆUJĪVAGRANTHAYE HRAIṀ ||
13) Palate: HROṀ O ṆA RUDRĀYAI RUDRAGRANTHAYE HROṀ ||
14) Point on Forehead: HRAUṀ AU RA ĪŚĀNĀYAI ĪŚAGRANTHAYE HRAUṀ ||
15) Location of Sound: HRAṀ AṀ RI SĀDĀKHYĀYAI SĀDĀKHYAGRANTHAYE HRAṀ ||
16) End of Śakti at the top of the Topknot: HRAḤ AḤ PA MAHĀMĀYĀYAI MAHĀMĀYĀGRANTHAYE HRAḤ ||

39. The text and the meaning here are uncertain. The reading of this line in the KMT (17/84cd) is substantially different. There we find:

One should deposit the treasure transmitted by word of mouth (mukhakośa) with the five seed-syllables and five syllable OṀs

pañcabījair mukhakoṣaṁ pañcauṁkāraiḥ khilaṁ nyaset |

The context in the KuKh and the KMT are not the same. The KMT is describing the mantras that adorn the goddess and constitute her sonic body (mūrti). The KuKh is simply listing the sixteen depositions the officiant should perform.

40. The Upadeśasūtra begins here and continues up to the end of this chapter.

41. The Division of the Couple is the Divine Current which is a stream of eighteen and their powerholders embodied in Śrīnātha and Ciñciṇī, the Couple at the end of the series (see above 2/27 and below 57/99-100ab).

42. As usual, bali offerings are made after the formation and worship of the Gurumaṇḍala. Cf. 48/22cd-24.

43. Cf. 37/5-6ab.

44. The text is both lacunose and corrupt here and so makes no sense.

45. According to 3/43-44 above, the energy of the New Moon itself checks the two polarities of the ascending and descending breath. When this takes place the lunar energy of Kuṇḍalinī in the centre flows up through the psychic centres of the body energizing it progressively. But, instead of depleating this energy in this way, on the contrary, it increases, waxing progressively like the moon in the bright lunar fortnight. When this process is complete, all sixteen energies of the Moon are gathered together into the Full Moon. This is followed by the New Moon, the seventeenth energy, identified with the Command. As the source of the other sixteen, it feeds the Moon from within with its blissful, nectar-like energy causing it to increase. The fullness of the Full Moon developes into the emptiness of the New Moon. The first lunar day is in the centre between the phases of increase and decrease. It represents the pure transcendental reality which abides permanently just as it without phases or transformations of its energies.

46. Even those who are not accomplished yogis may be conscious of how the energy of the Command flows downwards through the Wheels of the body in the sequence of emanation. However, the reverse, upward flow, which is that of reabsorption, can only be experienced by advanced yogis. All they need to do is deposit the secondary limbs of the goddess on their body. The others should deposit both types.

As usual, the adept must be purified before he can generate and worship the Krama in the maṇḍala. This takes place by the rise of Kuṇḍalinī through the Wheels in the body. This is followed in the previous version by a series of depositions onto the body. In this case the same result is obtained by this deposition and that of the energies of the three Gestures corresponding to the three lineages.

47. See above, note to 3/48.

48. See chapter 57.

49. Lines 48/77cd-80ab are adaptations of SKh 5/91cd-94ab.

50. See above 48/55.

51. The set up here seems to be that two faces – the southern and the northern – are outside, to the right and left of the Hexagram. The head below the uppermost one above should be in the upper corner, which is in the east. If the other two faces are outside the Hexagram, it seems likely that the eastern one is also. The other three faces seem to be in the centre. This is clearly the case with the uppermost and the western faces. If the corner of the Weapon is the centre, called 'the Circle of the Point' in the following lines, the western face is worshipped there also.

The equivalent three lines in the SKh (5/91cd-92) prescribe a more simple setup. It is possible, of course, that the text has been corrupted here through the transmission but it seems more likely that the changes were intended by the redactor of this part of the KuKh. The SKh says:

(Imagine that the Principle of the Command along with (its) faces and limbs is just there.) The eastern face is above and should always be worshipped (there) in the iconic form (mūrti) (of the goddess). The eastern face is in the east. The southern face is in the south, the northern face is in the north and the western face is in the west.

(ājñātattvaṁ [k: -cakraṁ; g: ājñātatva] tu tatraiva savaktrāṅgaṁ prakalpayet |)
pūrvavaktraṁ tathā ūrdhve mūrtau [kh: mūrtaṁ] saṁpūjayet sadā ||
pūrvataḥ pūrvavaktraṁ tu dakṣiṇe dakṣamānanam [g: -mānanaḥ] |
uttare cottaraṁ vaktraṁ paścime paścimānanam ||

Only the upper and lower corners of the Hexagram are set in primary directions, that is, east and west respectively. The other four are in the intermediate ones. It is possible that only two faces are in the corners of the Hexagram and the other two mentioned here are outside it. Perhaps all four are outside it. Either way, this set up seems strange. The Hexagram is especially suitable for sixfold projections, and the limbs and faces of the goddess are typical ones. Moreover, one wonders what has happened to the upper and uppermost face in the set up outlined in the SKh.

52. The goddess's limbs are projected into the syllable Vāgbhava in the centre, as illustated in the following diagram.

Diagram 1. The Limbs of the Goddess in Vāgbhava according to the Kumārikākhaṇḍa

The set up in the SKh is not quite the same. The equivalent lines there (SKh 5/93-94ab) say:

The Heart is in Kāmarūpa. The Head is said to be in Pūrṇagiri. The Topknot is in the sacred seat of Jālandhara. One should worship the Armour in the other (seat). The Third Eye is in the middle and the Weapon is in the primary and secondary directions.

kāmarūpe [k: -rūpaṁ] tu hṛdayaṁ śiraḥ [k, kh, g: -raṁ] pūrṇagirau smṛtam |
śikhā jālandhare pīṭhe apare [kh: adhare] kavacaṁ yajet ||
netratrayaṁ tathā madhye astraṁ dikṣu vidikṣu ca |

In this setup the Third Eye occupies the centre. This is where Oḍḍiyāna is located and so we may assume that this is the seat of this limb. Thus, the 'other' is probably the seat Tisra. This projection may be represented schematically as follows:

Diagram 2. The Limbs of the Goddess in Vāgbhava according to the Siddhakhaṇḍa 53. KMT 16/70-81 lists twenty-six maṇḍalas of the goddess whose body is supported or produced by the *maṇḍala*s. (See Heilijgers-Seelen 1994: 172, 271-2 who discusses the variants in the KMT and the ṢSS. See below, note 50/20-23 for more details. Cf. SKh (7/99cd): There are twenty-eight maṇḍalas up to the one called the Command (yāvad ājñākhyaparyantaṁ maṇḍalāny aṣṭāviṁśatiḥ).

54. These are, no doubt, the sixty-four Yoginīs.

55. The eight fields where the Mothers reside are worshipped, as usual, on the eight petals of the lotus surrounding the hexagram beginning with Prayāga on the eastern petal, then the rest in due order moving round clockwise.

56. The Trikhaṇḍā Vidyā is the Great (bṛhat) Samayā Vidyā of 292 syllables (see above 30/23 also below 50/31cd-32). It is presented in chapter five of the KMT. It is a Trika Samayā taught originally in the Tantrasadbhāva. By assimilating it to the Samayā of the goddess, the Kubjikā tradition covertly acknowledges and strengthens its Trika roots. The three parts of the Trikhaṇḍā Vidyā, also known as the Umāmaheśvaracakra, are worshipped in the corners of the inner Triangle. They have two names:

1) Brahmākhaṇḍa – Stutikhaṇḍa 2) Viṣṇukhaṇḍa – Mātṛkhaṇḍa 3) Rudrakhaṇḍa – Mantrakhaṇḍa.

As sacred seats are located on the corners of the Triangle, it is natural to associate them with the parts of the Vidyā, as we do in fact find in the SKh:

Thus the Samayā Vidyā is in the three seats, (present there) in due order. The Stutikhaṇḍa is in Kāmākhya, the Mātṛkhaṇḍa is in Pūrṇagiri, and the Mantrakhaṇḍa is Uḍyāṇa or else, Laghvī (is there) according to (her) desired form.

tato vai samayāṁ vidyāṁ triṣu pīṭheṣv anukramāt [g: pīṭhesva-] ||
stutikhaṇḍaṁ tu kāmākhye mātṛkhaṇḍaṁ tu pūrṇake [kh: mūrtake] |
mantrakhaṇḍaṁ tathoḍyāṇe [k: tatho prāṇe] laghvī vā kāmarūpataḥ ||
SKh 5/99cd-100

We are told below (50/31cd-2) the three places in the body onto which these three sections are projected. The following is a table of correspondences:

3. Table of Correspondences of the Three Parts of Trikhaṇḍā

Sections of Trikhaṇḍā	Corner of the triangle*[1]	Sacred seat*[2]	Part of the body*[3]
Stuti	Front	Kāmarūpa	Head
Mātṛ	Right	Pūrṇagiri	Heart

57. Possibly the 'city' (= 'city of bliss') mentioned above is this, the centre of the maṇḍala where Oḍḍiyāna is located.

58. Concerning this expression see above note to 2/28; cf 13/115d.

59. Concerning the signs of attainment see above notes to 31/32cd-35ab and 33/47-9.

NOTES OF THE TRANSLATION OF CHAPTER FORTY-NINE

1. The rest of this chapter is reproduced and briefly glossed in the SamP (fl. 11b-13a) where it is called the Dhyānasūtra. The variants have been noted in the critical apparatus of the edition.

2. SamP: (The reference to) the Gesture of the Rule (indicates the other) gestures including that of the Yoni and the rest. The lotus posture and the other (postures) are assumed by arranging the two feet (in various ways). A soft seat is made from soft cloth and the like. Having reached the (inner) seat which is the place of the foundation, that is, the feet. Having visualized the Yantra, the practicioners of mantra worship (it). It is visualized by those who identify with the body in their own body and is (then) worshipped. The visualization, for those who are comfortable with both (inner and outer worship), is of two kinds, namely, within the Yantra and inwardly (in the body). Being a yogi, one should visualize it through the practice (caryā) of Yoga.

samayamudrā yonimudrādayaḥ । pādadvayaveṣṭanena [-yena] padmāsanādi । mṛdvāsanaḥ [mṛddhāsanaḥ] komalavāsādiracitaḥ । ākramyeti āsanārthaḥ । sutalaḥ pādaḥ । mantropāsakā [-kair] yantraṁ [yantre] dhyātvā pūjayanti । dehābhimānībhiḥ svadehe dhyātvā pūjitam [-tāḥ] । ubhayānukūlakairubhayam dhyānaṁ dvividhaṁ yantrastham antaraṁ ceti yogī bhūtvā yogacaryayā dhyāyet ।

3. The word 'sutala' is an architectural term that denotes the foundation of a large building.

4. The Bell is the uvula at the back of the throat (normally called ghaṇṭikā lit `little bell'. It is also Unstruck Sound; cf. 49/12cd-13.

5. SamP (One who is) ecstatic and inebriated is ecstatic with wine (kṣībonmatto madirāmattaḥ). Cf. 46/302-304.

6. According to Monier-Williams the adjective juṣṭa- means: pleased, propitious; liked, wished, loved, welcome, agreeable, usual; frequented, visited, inhabited; swept over (by the wind); afflicted by; served, obliged, worshipped; practiced; furnished with, possessed of; the remanents of a meal; juṣṭi (f.): love service, favour, satisfaction. Thus as 'juṣṭa' the goddess is 'propitious', 'agreeable' and 'loving'. At the same time, as a caṇḍālinī, she is an outcaste woman who is so impure and low in social status that she is free to eat the remanents of other peoples' meals – their 'juṣṭa'. Kubjikā, who receives and consumes offerings that are normally considered to be impure and polluting, is thus outwardly like her, even as she inwardly transforms pollution into nectar. In this form she governs the Lineage of the Eldest. As Mātaṅgī, the Sweeper, another low caste woman, she presides over the Lineage of the Youth. That form is described below at the beginning of chapter 66. In the form described in chapter 29 she governs the Lineage of the Child. That one is also linked to pollution through the jar she holds full of the Five Potions of Immortality, which are the bodily substances offered to her. See KuKh chapter 29, note 30.

Juṣṭacaṇḍālinī is Śirodūtī, the Dūtī of the Head, which is the second of the six Dūtīs who embody Kubjikā's six limbs. The Ṭīkā (MS K fl. 138b) calls her Śivādūtī. This Dūtī and her Vidyā are described in chapter seven of the KMT. Her visualized form is not the same. She is related to Svacchandabhairava who appears in chapter eight of the KMT as Śikhāsvacchanda, the god of the goddess's topknot and is called there Juṣṭacaṇḍeśvara. As such, she is an alternative form Vyādhi (Disease), his consort. According to the KMT (7/86cd-92ab):

> The Yoga based on the Head serves to bring ghosts, Vetāla, Rakṣāsas, daughters of Yakṣas and Yakṣiṇīs, Piśācīs and the like under control, reviving the dead, breaking fetters, and catching animals – one who has mastered the (Vidyā of the goddess's) Head performs many wonders.

Juṣṭacaṇḍalī is born from the goddess's hair, one of the most impure parts of the body. She protects weak adepts who are intensely engaged in their practice (sādhana). The Vidyā requires simply to be recited. Fire offerings are not necessary. The KMT (7/97-112) describes rituals relating to this goddess of black magic and `mean works' (kṣudrakraman) of 'restraint' or 'chastisement' (nigraha). These are performed in cremation grounds and the solitary banks of a river and involve writing the victims name in a Yantra made with poison and blood on human skin or a shroud. They cause high fever and death. The goddess is dark blue and horrific. Here, as a complete form of Kubjikā, rather than just a limb, she retains her dark colour but has become slim with beautiful eyes and is 'playful'. She is old, yet she retains the charm of youth. Although portrayed as frightening and 'paralysing her enemies', as the full goddess, she is no longer a deity of black rites.

7. The Sanskrit reads: siṁhāsanasamāśritā – which means simply that she is on a lion throne but as she is described as dancing it is clear that she is standing on it.

8. SamP: 'This is a sūtra of the current of the goddess'.

9. The Kramārcana described here is essentially a modified version of the one taught in the Kramasūtra of the Siddhakhaṇḍa. The following passage concludes the Kramasūtra the beginning of which been recorded and translated in the notes of the previous chapter. The passage here continues direct after the lines drawn from the SKh recorded above in the note to 48/85cd-86. We conveniently reproduce the rest of it here in one piece. The parts common with the version in the KuKh are in bold characters. The variant readings are recorded in the notes to the Sanskrit text.

One should worship with the group of ten gestures in accord with the tradition along with flowers sandal wood, lustrations and the like, flowers lamps, liquor (ali), incenses, food offerings of many kinds, including meat and wine, (One should worship) all aound with twenty-five Kula lamps and perform ārti by waving the lamp which is the energy of the Samayā around the venerable (goddess) Kujā.

There are said to be three faces and three lamps (that are offered) to the scripture in the Kula along with bali offerings of the right number and many lamps or else (one may do so) in brief (offering them to the teachers) beginning with Olinātha in due order. The first is the lamp offered to the lineage (olidīpa) and to the four sacred seats. Ārati (is performed) (by waving) the lamp which is the energy of the Samayā (around) the venerable goddess Kujā. That is also (to be done) for the Kula scripture. Thus (these are) the eight (rites).

The Wheel of Light (jyotiścakra) is said to be divided into gross and subtle. At the end of the rite of adoration one should repeat mantra making use of a rosary and with the lips closed in order to gain mastery of the coming and going (gamāgama) (of Kuṇḍalinī). By abandoning 'the coming and going' (that is, the going back and forth along the beads of the rosary in consonance with the repetition of the mantra) the 'coming and going' (of Kuṇḍalinī) ceases. Then one should contemplate and view the Supreme Principle above.

Having formed the gesture of the supreme Yoni, which is the great Bhairavī of the Rule, and once one has worshipped the goddess, one should salute (her) devoutly with the Root Sūtra. Or else (one should) also (worship her) along with the group of eight (Mothers) that surrounds the goddess with the Hymn to the Lineages (olistava). One should salute (her) in the manner prescribed with other (forms of) salutations and with the eight limbs of the body. One should offer salutation with eight limbs. One should offer salutation with a three-limbed, five-limbed and an eight-limbed (prostration) that is said to be the triple salutation by a full length prostration (daṇḍapāta) one is freed.

By circumambulating the maṇḍala of the conduct of the Rule one should salute (the goddess within it) three times and nine times with devotion so that one may attain accomplishment. One should salute the eight Virgins, four, two, three or (just) one.

And one should always repeat the Gāyatrī along with the king of Vidyās (in honour of) that teacher. By observing (that) (one attains) accomplishement – this is the Command of the Supreme Goddess. Having bowed to the divine Krama and having then obtained the sacrificial pap (the officiant) sits in the tortosie seat and, both hands locked in ritual gesture, (he offers) the Kaula sacrificial pap (caru) which, the best of all, is hard to acquire even by the gods. First come the lamps of Kula and then the sacrificial liquor. He should eat the sacrificial pap mixed with meat, his mind free of thought.

Then having rinsed one's mouth and bowed to that one should worship my Vidyā again. Whatever else there is less or apart from that it is certainly (also) purified (in this way). Once one has put the remnant of the offering (nirmālya) on (one's) head, one should dismiss the maṇḍala. Then after that one should drag it back in the reverse direction by means of the root Vidyā.

In this way, one should recollect the mantra and deposit the current of mantras in the heart having made all the remnant of the offering (nirmālya) to the Moon of Kula in the Western (Tradition) and having withdrawn the maṇḍala, (taking care to do so) in reverse every time and then drawn, a square throw flowers (into it).

This is said to be the worship of the transmission (kramārcana), which should be done at all times. One who is not born of a Yoginī and is not a Rudra does not obtain this (in a) clear (and certain form). The supreme secret has been explained. It should be protected as one does (one's own) body. O Śambhu, this is the Kramasūtra he who knows it is a (true) teacher.

10. We may surmise from this injunction that the performance of this rite is part of the adept's nocturnal practice (niśācāra), concerning which see, note 68 of chapter 11.

11. This is the hymn Bhairava recites to the goddess that induces her to burst out of the Liṅga. It comes at the beginning of chapter 2 in the KMT and in chapter four above.

12. These are presumably the first three *Praṇava*s, namely, AIṀ ŚRĪṀ HRĪṀ. The other two are PHREṀ (or KHPHREṀ) and HSAUḤ.

13. SamP: The (passage describing the) visualization (of the goddess's form) begins with 'three eyes' (49/25cd-27ab) and ends with 'like (one's) teacher' (49/40cd). The rest are the ancilliaries. The three-limbed is in the head encapsulated with AIṀ, in the heart encapsulated with HRĪṀ and in the navel encapsulated with ŚRĪṀ. The five-limbed (is formed) with the Five Praṇavas: AIṀ in the heart, HRĪṀ in the head, ŚRĪṀ is the topknot, HSPHREṀ is the armour, HSAUḤ is the eye and the weapon with (all five). The eight-limbed deposits each letter along with the two letters and syllables Ha and Sa on the body from the head up to the feet.

SamP: The great offering of lamps. The food offering contains sesame seed and sugar. Having eaten the special food offering consisting of crushed sesame and sugar one should eat meat (dīpabhakṣaṇa). Then one should drink liquor. The hymn is the Mālinīstava.

Again, egg, fish, meat, garlic, curd, and marrow – (they are) all called 'caru'. One should eat solid food mixed with curd etc and half cooked meat and the flesh of birds (khecaramāṁsa). After having waved the skull full of the sacrificial substance one should drink (from) it.

14. Read yajet for vrajet. Cf: SKh 5/109cd-110ab:

mudrāṁ badhvā parāṁ [kh: parā] yoniṁ mahāsamayabhairavīm [g: -bhairavi] || yaṣṭvā [k: yaṣṭhā] namaskriyā [k, kh, g: namaskared] devyā [k, kh, g: devīṁ] mūlasūtreṇa bhaktitaḥ [g: bhaktita] |

15. Here is another example of the ritual use of the recitation of this important sūtra which describes the goddess's Yoni.

16. Perhaps this seven letter Vidyā is the mantra of Vaṭuka Bhairava. But if so, as Vaṭuka is a male deity, we would expect the text to refer to it as a mantra not a Vidyā.

17. The rite concludes, as usual with the consumption of the sacrificial pap. It gives siddhi and even liberation, that is, the fruits of the union with the deity that takes place through the performance of the rite.

18. Note that this form of the Kramārcana is the one performed on particular occasions (naimittika) rather than the regular, daily (nitya) form of it. Examples of special days (parvan) are the Siddhas' birthdays.

19. After Mukundarāja has quoted this passage, which he calls the Dhyānasūtra, in full, he concludes:

This is the Dhyānasūtra. Kubjikā's visualized form has been described in sixty-six verses. Briefly the meaning is as follows [. . .] Such is the visualization of oneself as Kubjeśvara. One should visualize one's own woman in the form of Kubjikā. One should visualize (her) mentally in the yantra or draw (her in it). Having drawn (her) in the yantra etc one should contemplate (her). Having worshipped the idol (of the goddess) one should contemplate (her). One should contemplate (her) in a simple stone, in the sacrificial ground, in a heap of uncrushed rice, in a flower, in a jar, in tumeric (rañjana), in vermillion, in an ornament, in a book, in the water of a sacred bathing place, in a mirror, in the solar orb, in the moon, in the darkness in the universe, in a solitary place, in a cave etc, in one's own body, in a Kula tree, in a sacred seat or in a Liṅga.

Mukundarāja now goes on to gloss what appears to be a fragment of the text that has been lost. He writes:

'The god is seated on a bull' This and other such visualizations are described elsewhere in the book. In actual fact, the king and queen of the gods, Indra and Indrāṇī (are mentioned) in the context of a (description of) the deities on the path in order to see (and venerate them). Then Kubjikā is attained, then Pārvatī and then Śacī.

NOTES OF THE TRANSLATION OF CHAPTER FIFTY

1. A few of the first thirteen verses of this chapter are drawn from the Kramasūtra of the Siddhakhaṇḍa, which our text refers to here simply as the 'sūtra'. See note at the beginning of chapter 48 and Sanskrit edition for details. These verses outline how the Krama of Twenty-eight divisions is projected onto the body. The Krama of Twenty-eight (aṣṭaviṁśatikrama) is the one taught in the KMT and the ṢSS. The main Krama of YKh (1) consist of twenty-seven mantra (see above note to 3/52cd-53ab). The KuKh presents a variety of Kramas, but as a whole follows YKh (1) and accepts the Krama of Twenty-seven (saptaviṁśatikrama) to be the main one. This is further evidence that the part of the text in common with the SKh is drawn from it.

2. Mukundarāja quotes the passage from 50/4ab to the end of this chapter in full and calls it the Pūjāsūtra.

3. In the SKh the following two lines (i.e. SKh 5/79cd-80ab), which frame the context there, precede this section:

One should worship the Gurumaṇḍala with flowers along with scent and water (argha) five times and then Olinātha in the middle of the directions.

gandhārghasaṁyutaiḥ (k g: -tai) puṣpaiḥ (g: puṣpai) pūjayed gurumaṇḍalam ||
pañcadhā madhyato dikṣu olinātham ataḥ param |

This is followed by the corresponding line to this one which reads:

One should worship the line of teachers up to the name of one's own (teacher) to the north of him.

tasyottare (kh: -ttāra) gurupaṅktiṁ (k: guruṁ-) svanāmāntaṁ prapūjayet |

4. The projection and worship of the units of the Krama taught here takes place progressively down the body. We may presume, therefore, that the sacred seats, which constitute the first group of four of the Krama, are worshipped in the Triangle in the End of the Twelve.

5. Instead of KuKh 50/7ab SKh (5/83ab) reads:

. . . (and on) the tip of the nose in due order is the leader of the five Mātaṅgī Kulas.

nāsikāgre kramāt (kh: kramāvartya) pañcamātaṅgīkulanāyakam |

6. KuKh 50/8cd-10ab is replaced by SKh 5/84cd-88ab:

The group of six has six parts (koṭi) and (is worshipped), as before, in accord with the order of emanation. One should then worship the group of four gestures below the navel. Along with the five Mahantaryās in the middle of the navel, in the left breast, in the right, in the middle śāsana (?) and the wheel of birth, in due order. The four Ājñāsiddhas are in the front corner, the left and to the right of the location of the uvula and in the middle place. Now one should worship it in one's own mouth in accord with the order of emanation – on the two feet, the left and right ear and the navel, in due order.

ṣaṭkoṭisahitaṁ (k: -koṭhi-) ṣaṭkaṁ sṛṣṭinyāyena pūrvavat ||
tato mudrācatuṣkaṁ (g: -catuṣka) tu nābhyadhastāt (k: nātyadhastāt; kh: nābhyasthā ca) prapūjayet |
nābhimadhye vāmastane dakṣe (k kh: dakṣa) madhyamaśāsane ||
janmacakre mahantāryāpañcabhis tu anukramāt | agrakoṇe tathā vāme ghaṇṭikāsthānadakṣiṇe |||
tathā madhye (g: madhya) pradeśe ca ājñāsiddhacatuṣṭayam |
idānīṁ tu svavaktre (k kh g: acakre) tu sṛṣṭinyāyena pūjayet ||
pādābhyāṁ vāmakarṇe tu dakṣiṇe (kh: -ṇā) nābhyanukramāt (k: madhyamanu-; kh g: madhyanu-) |

7. The following two lines appear in the SKh (5/89cd-90ab) instead of KuKh 50/11cd-12ab:

There are twenty-eight maṇḍalas up to (the Wheel) called the Command (arranged all) around (it). One should worship the ghost (preta) (on which the goddess sits) in the middle of the girdle.

yāvad ājñākhyaparyantaṁ maṇḍalāny aṣṭāviṁśatiḥ (k kh g: -ṣṭaviṁ-; g: -ti) ||
samantān mekhalāyāṁ (g: -mekhalād + yaṣṭaviṁśatiyāṁ) tu madhye pretaṁ tu pūjayet (kh: vinyaset) |

Notice that the six Wheels in the body are identified with the six parts (prakāra) of the goddess's maṇḍala, a term that, along with ṣaṭpura and ṣaṭpadārtha is used to designate them in the KMT. Heilijgers-Seelen notes that: 'in chapter 11-13 of the KMT, which deal with the six centres from Ādhāra to Ājñā, the concept of a cakra in its later sense is hardly expressed. With one exception [perhaps anāhata in KMT 11/109a], these centres are not referred to by the terms cakra or ṣaṭcakra.' Heilijgers-Seelen 1994: 38 see also Heilijgers-Seelen 1990.

8. SKh: When the seat (āsana) has thus been produced.

9. This line (50/13ab) is SKh 5/91ab. SKh 5/91-94ab, which roughly corresponds to 48/77cd-80ab, is recorded in the notes there. This is followed by:

O omniscient one, one should worship Gāyatrī in the middle and the Octad of Kula anti-clockwise in the eight directions. The five Immortal Ones (amarīpañca) are worshipped on the head, in the middle, south, east, north and in front. There one should worship the two groups of six concerned with restraint (nigraha) and grace (anugraha). There are sixty-four deities, divided into eight groups of eight arranged progressively anti-clockwise in the corner in front, in the south-east, south-west, the western petal, the north-west and in the north-east. Having worshipped (them) on the head, one should worship the group of eight houses and fields in one's own body with the two feet and two knees, in the Yoni, the navel, heart, throat, mouth, and forehead, in due order. Then (one should worship) the Samayā Vidyā in the three sacred seats, in due order.

gāyatrīṁ pūjayen madhye dikṣu cāṣṭau [g: ccaṣṭau] kulāṣṭakam ||
vāmāvartena sarvajña [k, kh: sarvajñaḥ] madhye dakṣiṇapūrvataḥ [g: -ta] |
uttare ca tathā cāgre amarīpañca mastake ||
nigrahānugrahaṁ tatra ṣaṭkadvayaṁ prapūjayet |
agrakoṇe tathāgneyāṁ nairṛtye [k: nairṛte; g: naiṛte] vāruṇe dale ||
vāyavye ca tatheśāne catuḥṣaṣṭis tu [k: -ṣaṣṭhi tu; kh: -ṣaṣṭhistu; g: catu-] devatāḥ [g: devatā] |
aṣṭāṣṭakavibhāgena vāmāvartakrameṇa [g: vāmavarta-] tu ||
mastake pūjayitvā tu gṛhakṣetrāṣṭakaṁ yajet |
pādābhyāṁ caiva jānubhyāṁ yonau nābhyāṁ hṛdi [k g: hṛdis] tathā ||
kaṇṭhe mukhe lalāṭe ca svaśarīre yathākramam |
tato vai samayāṁ vidyāṁ triṣu pīṭheṣv anukramāt [g: pīṭhesva-] || SKh 5/94cd-99

The three sections of the MBT are worshipped there in the sacred seats in the manner described in SKh 5/100-101ab which is recorded and translated in a note to 48/85cd-86. The remaining part of the Kramasūtra from SKh 5/101cd to the end is in a note to 49/44.

10. Two Mothers are missing, probably because of a lacuna in the MSs. See KuKh vol. 4, appendix 7, for a table of the Eight Mothers.

11. KuKh 50/16-18 are a version of KuKh 7/82-86ab. These lines are probably drawn from YKh (2) 15/89cd-91. All the versions have been collated in the notes to the Sanskrit text of 7/82-86ab.

The first line of this passage is missing here. Found above (7/82cd), it says: The first (of the Nine Siddhas) is between the eyebrows. The second is in the Circle of the Foundation (ādhāramaṇḍala).

12. Concerning the Nine and Sixteen Siddhas, see above, chapter seven.

13. As the lunar days arise from the Liṅga in the centre of the maṇḍala (48/88), perhaps these maṇḍalas correspond to the 28 lunar days. It is more likely, however that the 28 maṇḍalas house the parts of the Krama, or, indeed, both. Note that only twenty-six locations are listed here although according to the SKh there are twenty-eight maṇḍalas (SKh 5/89cd-90ab quoted in note to KuKh 50/11-12ab; also see above 48/80-81ab). The KMT (16/71ff). lists twenty-one and the ṢSS (25/121cd-127) twenty-six, corresponding to the letters from Ka onwards. A passage in chapter 9 (verse 23 ff.) of the AS is dedicated to the maṇḍalas. According to the AS there are three groups of twenty-eight maṇḍalas – one for each of the three lineages. The worship of these maṇḍalas and their projection onto the body is one of the ways the Krama can be worshipped. There the worship in this way of the maṇḍalas constitutes the last of six Currents (ogha) worshipped on particular lunar days. According to the AS they are: 1) Gurvogha 2) Kramaugha 3) Ājñā Ogha 4) Kulaugha 5) Puruṣaugha 6) Maṇḍalaugha (AS 9/48-49ab). According to the AS:

The tradition of the Transmission (kramāmnāya) consists of the six Currents. There are eight sacred days according to the Kulāgama. Once known the signs (nimitta) in each month, one becomes a member of the transmission (kramika). This is not so if one is not born from a Yoginī. One who is not Rudra does not obtain it in a clear way. The teaching concening the transmission of the six currents (oghakrama) is clear (only) in the Kubjikā tradition (āmnāya).

ṣaḍoghaṁ [ṣaḍaṁghe] krama-āmnāyaṁ parvāny aṣṭau kulāgame ||
māse māse nimittānāṁ jñātvā tu kramiko bhavet |
evaṁ [etan] ya [no] yoginījāto nārudro labhate sphuṭam ||
sasphuraṁ kubjikāmnāye ṣaḍoghakramanirṇayam | AS 9/49cd-52ab

Cf. KuKh 48/83 ff. where another set of Six Currents are listed. After the AS has listed the names of the twenty-eight maṇḍalas of each of the three lineages (AS 9/23-42ab), it goes on to list the places in the body into which they are projected (AS 9/42cd-47).

14. The text is very concise here. Even so, it is clear that the intention is to link the sixty-four Yoginīs to the Eight Mothers as is commonly done. The following verses, also found in the KMT, are drawn from the TS. They come at the beginning of a long passage concerning the sixty-four Yoginīs that opens with the declaration:

O fair lady, next I will tell (you) in brief the names of the Yoginīs who have come forth in each mantra and are divided into eight groups of eight in accord with the division of the group of eight Mothers.

athātaḥ saṁpravakṣyāmi nāmāni tu samāsataḥ |
yoginīnāṁ varārohe aṣṭāṣṭakavibhāgaśaḥ (g: -saḥ) ||
mātryaṣṭakavibhedena mantre mantre visarpitāḥ | TS 13/65-66ab

15. KuKh 50/25cd-30ab = KM 25/90cd-95 = TS 15/62cd-67. These verses are drawn either from the KMT or from the TS, which is their original source. The context where these verses appear in the KMT and the TS is the Vidyāvrata which requires the adept to wander to the sacred sites projected into the soul of the inner wayfarer.

16. See note to 48/85cd-86 for a table of correspondences.

17. After Mukundarāja has quoted this, the Pūjāsūtra, in full he goes on to say:

One should worship the deity of a particular place in one's body after having visualized it (there). All the groups of deities mentioned in the MBT should be worshipped in their respective places in one's own body or else in images of the deities or in a Yantra.

The general form of the mantra used to worship these deities begins with the Five Praṇavas and the rest, the name of the deity comes in the middle and it ends with `I worship the sandals'. The ritual begins with the worship of the door, this is followed by the purification of the elements (of the body), the deposition, the installation of the deity and its visualization, the worship of the attendant deities and the main deity, the offering of the offerings, the repetition of the (deity's) mantra, hymns, animal sacrifice, the offering of lamps at night and the dismissal of the deity.

This is the overall pattern in all the Tantras. There are differences according to the practice of one's own particular Kula, country (deśa) and time. But although there are such differences (nonetheless true initiates) worship with pure feelings (bhāva).

NOTES OF THE TRANSLATION OF CHAPTER FIFTY-ONE

1. These lines appear at the beginning of the Gurukramādhikārasūtra found in chapter 22 of YKh (1) (22/25cd-45ab) from which it draws its name. The rest of that sūtra explains them as follows:

Brahminicide, the drinking of wine, theft, sex with the teacher's consort, and incitement or association with these sins (saṁyogin) are said to be the five great sins according to the Siddhānta. Brahminicide, the drinking of wine, theft, and sex with the teacher's consort – these, excluding incitement or association with them, are the four sins according to (the teachings of the Tantras of the) North. The drinking of wine, theft, and sex with the teacher's consort – is said to be the triad of the (Tantras of the) South. Now I will tell you the two of the East. The two sins (there) that are hard to bear are the drinking of wine and sex with the teacher's consort. In the Three Lineages in Kujā's tradition no atoning penance is possible for the abduction of the teacher's consort. (This sin persists), undestroyed, birth after birth.

There are four types of violence to which the teacher may be subject that brings about the fall of all (and anybody who does it to him) but especially those who have (pledged to follow the teachings of the) Hermitage in the Western (tradition). In increasing order (of gravity) the fourfold sin of violence to the teacher (found) in the disciple is (violence to) the teacher's Command, the teacher's substance, the teacher's task and the teacher's woman. Great acts of disrespect and the like are bound with the bonds of aversion. Freed from such violence to the teacher, one is not stained by other sins.

Brahminicide, useless drinking, stealing the teacher's substance and woman. (These are the four) great sins (according to) the Kaula (teachings) and that associated with them is the fifth. He who does violence to the teacher is (constantly) afflicted. (One is a true teacher) if he is like Bhairava, solitary, free of desire, tranquil, the guardian of the Great Rule (mahāsamaya) and resides on the plane devoid of `own nature' (niḥsvabhāvapada) and (such also) is the teacher's brother and son. If one desires (to receive) the transmission of the teachers (gurukrama), one should not disobey their commands.

All the elders in the maṇḍalakrama in the lineages of the Eldest, Middle One and Child are equal to the teacher. One should not disobey their command.

Always intent on religious observance (anuṣṭhāna), they awaken to (the meaning of the) Matarāja. One should not behave (as if one were their) equal. One should not tell them about (one's own) penance (but simply do it).

Anxiety is certainly the result of stealing the Command. One who is fit for the teacher's position is mounted on the Command and has conquered the senses. (Such a one) should not be rejected or obstructed. (The teacher should give him) the Rule as he would to a son.

He may give all the Mata, or half, or a quarter, or half of that or (just) a hundred (verses) or half of that – (the disciple who receives it) is certainly my equal. He is a part of Rudra (rudrāṁśaka) and is born in the womb of a Yoginī. One should not behave proudly with him or obstruct him. One should not give him a penance (to observe), even if (he has committed) a hundred sins. He who is proud (with his teacher) is overcome by countless obstacles. (The teacher) is worshipped by those born from the sacred seats, fields and mantras. O Lord of the gods, unobstructed, he is worshipped even by the gods. Just by seeing him one gets what one wants. By touching him (all) are freed even from great sins. One attains supreme omniscience if one desires accomplishment for one's self.

These lines also appear in the SKh (11/7-8ab) but there the context is different. They are preceded by a passage describing the 'Convention of the Flowers', that is, the Divine Current (see above 5/46cd-47ab and 7/62cd-63. and chapter 57 below). Unfortunately, probably due to a loss in the transmission of the text of the SKh, the passage is followed by just the two lines noted below. Even so, the preceding context suggests that the meaning attributed to this obscure statement in the Ykh (1) is not the only one.

The teacher's word is in the teacher's mouth. It is well established in the teacher's mouth. (It comes forth) from the teacher's mouth and from nowhere else, (not even) millions of books.

2. Above in 2/29-30ab (and notes) Vṛkṣanātha, the first Nātha, is said to possess the nine energies of Navātman (see also below 52/7cd-9). In the augmented form of the Kramamaṇḍala called the Gurumaṇḍala we have already noted how each of the nine letters of Navātman serve as the nucleus of nine permutations thus making 81 parts (pada).

3. The sixteen energies are those of the vowels. These correspond to the lunar energies in the seventh Wheel above the head, which is the domain of the liberated condition Beyond the Fourth state. The 16 Siddhas have realised this state and so reside there. YKh (1) 3/220-221ab and YKh (1) 16/245-246ab add:

Possessing an iconic form along with limbs and faces and conjoined with the twelve gestures, he is in the middle of the peak of the mountain and is adorned with the five maṇḍalas (of the Praṇavas), conjoined with three energies, and adorned with Śabda Mālinī.

4. Concerning the Triple Vidyā see above, chapter 20. According to the ṢSS the seed-syllables of the three points of conjunction are HRAUṀ, SRAUṀ and SHŪṀ. See diagram, intro. vol. 1, p. 273.

5. YKh (1) (3/242cd-244ab) says about the Brahminical thread:

> (He is) adorned with the Brahminical thread that (extends) from the feet up to the sacred seats of the face. The thread of Brahmā is varied, it consists of the Sun and Moon and is the devoured morsel of the energy of Space (khakalāgrāsa). It is the Sound of (the process of) differentiation (that generates) the universe, the terrible sound of the roar of the energy of Kuṇḍalinī (śaṅkhinī). The One-footed (E) is called the Kadamba, which is the teacher endowed with the triple city (of the triangle).

7. The verses up to 51/15ab are the Sūtra of Twelve (Verses concerning) Vṛkṣanātha. See below note to 51/15cd-16ab.

8. These four lines come after YKh (1) 3/226ab (= KuKh 51/10cd):

> One should think of the Wheel of the sacrificial food, the Rule and the Khañjīmata. The purification (saṁskāra) takes place threefold by means of the eldest. One should take support from (the lineages of) the Child. Place the (teacher's) brother in the Heart, the one and two along with the three.

The equivalent four lines in YKh (1) 16 say:

> O lord of the gods, one should practice along with one who attains thus.

One should worship the one Wheel and the Rule with that same procedure. One should salute an elder twice and place (the lineage of the) Child on the throat. Place the (teacher's) brother in the Heart with those born in (the same) clan on the two hands.

9. This verse was originally at the end of the Meruprastārasūtra which follows this sūtra. The same verse appears at the end of the Vṛkṣadvādaśikasūtra in the other two places it occurs in YKh (1). Thus it is clear that it has been erroneously misplaced and so has been replaced here at the end of the sūtra to which it belongs.

After the first occurrence of the Vṛkṣasūtra in YKh (1) (3/1-14ab), it declares that it is concerned with the Āṇava form of the teacher. It is followed in YKh (1) by the Gurukramasūtra in which the Śākta and Śāmbhava forms are described. See intro. vol. 2 p. 416 ff. where it is quoted in full.

10. See note to 4/8 above. The teachings of the Kaulajñānanirṇaya, or to be more precise, the Jñānanirṇitiyoginīkaula, brought down to earth by Matsyendranātha (also called Macchagna), are said in the colophons to have come from the Island of the Moon.

11. The following passage up to the end of this chapter is also found in YKh (2) 24/1-15ab where it is divided into two parts. The first part (YKh (2) 24/1-10 = KuKh 51/16cd-26ab) is called the 'paṁcāśatpīṭhameruprastāra' i.e. 'The grid of Meru consisting of fifty sacred seats'. The second part (YKh (2) 24/11-15ab = KuKh 51/26cd-30) ends with 'this is the sūtra' (iti * * * * (?) sūtraṁ). There is a gap in the text which probably originally read Gahvarasūtra. This division into two parts has been carried over into all the MSs of the KuKh. There the first part is called the Meruprastārasūtra and the second the Gahvarakrama. Judging from the contents it appears that this division is erroneous. Accordingly, the sūtra has been restored to its presumed original form as a single unit. Thus the following chapter, called the Sūtra of the First Nātha (ādināthasūtra), has been reduced to just the three lines that make up that sūtra or what has remained of it.

The Gahvarasūtra is followed in the YKh (2) by the Santānasūtra that constitutes chapter 53 of the KuKh. Immediately after that in the Ykh (2) (26/1-19) comes the ārādhyamaṇḍalasūtra which is chapter 55 here. Thus, it appears that chapter 52 and 54 are interpolations.

12. KuKh: Vārāṇasī. Above, 16/80, this place is called Hakkaḍokka, which appears to be a more correct spelling. It is where the Yoginī Bhaga is said to reside along with Śrīkaṇṭha.

13. KuKh: Pūrṇavardhana. 14. KuKh: Kāmra. 15. KuKh: Trisrota.
16. KuKh: Kāmakoṭṭaka. 17. KuKh: Kailāsa.
18. KuKh: Bhṛgunagara. 19. KuKh: Kulūtī. 20. KuKh: Devikoṭa.
21. KuKh: Merukeśvara. 22. KuKh: + Viraja (Ña) and Rājagṛha (Ṭa).
23. KuKh: + Elāpura (Ḍa). 24. This entry is missing above in 6/212-8.
25. KuKh: Ujjaiyinī. 26. KuKh: Odukeśa.
27. One entry is missing here; see 6/212cd-229ab above.
28. KuKh: Urasā. 29. KuKh: Śrīśaila. 30. KuKh: Māhendra.
31. KuKh: Vāruṇa. 32. KuKh: Udyāṇa.
33. KuKh: Chāyācatra.

34. Cf. above 6/212ff. etc.. The sign 'KuKh' signals the reading found above in 6/212ff.. The variants from other sources are noted there.

35. Cf. KuKu 1/1 note 21. 36. See above 35/63-70.

37. This is the Saṁvartāmaṇḍala. See above note to 2/14; cf. 3/164d, 45/41d, 60/17b and 68/49d.

38. KuKh 52/1-5ab = YKh (2) 24/11-15ab. See above, chapter eight where the formation and content of the Meruprastāra is discussed in detail.

39. See above 8/18-20 for another list of the contents of the seven rows in the gahavara.

40. The term gahvara denotes a type of prastāra. We know, for example, of a grid called the Vajragahvara (see Schoterman). In this case, it is clear that the Sequence of the Abyss (gahvarakrama) is the sequence of letters deposited in the Meruprastāra that has just been described. Kālāgni is the letter KṢa. Therefore, Nātha must be the letter A. This letter is normally governed by Śrīkaṇṭha, so the Nātha meant here is Śrīkaṇṭha. Above in 2/40 we are told that the series from Kālāgni to Śiva consists of fifty worlds. Nātha, is there equated with the world of Śiva.

The Sequence of the Innate (sahajākrama) is equivalent to the Sequence of the Abyss. The former is said to begin with Śiva and end with the energy of the Cavity (of Brahmā) Void (randhraśakti) (above 8/25cd-26ab). The triangle is located in the End of the Twelve and according to that account points downwards. Thus the tip is resting on the top of the head where the Cavity of Brahmā is located.

41. This colphon originally followed after 51/25ab. The colophon in MS Gh says: This is the chapter called the Sūtra of the Meruprastāra consisting of the Fifty Sacred Seats. It belongs to the primordial descent into the great sacrifice of the Churning Bhairava in the tradition (anvaya) that consists of seventy million (verses) that has emerged on the Path of Meru and (extends) for more than a hundred thousand quarter (verses). It is the ultimate purport of the Pure Six Thousand (verses) (vimalaṣaṭka) in the division beginning with 'Kā'.

NOTES OF THE TRANSLATION OF CHAPTER FIFTY-THREE

1. This is the second of two Santānasūtras. The first is in chapter seventeen. This one, which is also called the Prajñāsūtra (which may be its original name) claims to present the 'hidden meaning' (gūḍhārtha) of the Santānasūtra. Even so, Mukundarāja prefers to comment only on the first one. The contents of the two sūtras partly coincide throwing light on each others' meaning when they do so. The reader is referred back to the notes of chapter seventeen where they are compared. This Santānasūtra is also found in YKh (2) (24/15cd-30) with which it has been collated.

The Ś*rīsantānasūtra* in chapter seveneteen defines sixteen 'conventions' (saṁketa), which are all briefly redefined in this version of the Santānasūtra. They are (each entry is followed by the verse numbers of chapter seventeen where it appears):

1) The Path of Meru (16-19); 2) The Deity of the Lineage (20-25); 3) and 4) Oṁkāra and the Two Siddhas (26-28ab); 5) The Cave Dwelling (28cd-29); 6) The Kadamba Tree (30-31); 7) The Convention of the Lion (32-3); 8) The House of the City of the Moon (34); 9) The Division of the Churning Bhairava (35-6ab); 10) The Clan (36cd- 39); 11) The Sign of Accomplishment (40-43ab); 12) Authority (43cd-44); 13) Brahmā's Stone of Birth (45-46ab); 14) Persistence in Kāmarūpa (46cd-47cd); 15) Fame and the Tamarind Tree (48); 16) The Ocean (49) and Conclusion (50-56).

2. Cf. 17/16-19 (1); 17/20-25 (2); 17/26-28ab (3, 4) and 17/28cd-29 (5).

3. The two Flowers are Śakti as Ciñciṇī and Śiva as Śrīnātha (see intro. vol. 2, p. 410-411 and 39/52) represented by the letter Kha and Ma, respectively. The former is the Void of the Yoni (= unbounded Emptiness) that represents Mālinī, the deity of the lineage and the latter the Point (= transdimensional Emptiness) in the centre. embodied in the Bhairava of Knowledge – the First Teacher. The two combine to form the Path of Meru, that is, the tradition and its teachings. The twelfth Jewel is the letter E, which represents the 'body' of the Triangle. From the triangular Path of Meru emerge the six deities of the Hexagram who govern all the groups of six that form the Krama.

4. The 'garden' – udyāna – is the seat Oḍḍiyāna, which houses the Point in the centre. The Void of the Liṅga is the Cave (58/7cd-8ab) above the Half Moon (see 58/7).

5. Cf. below, 58/64cd-65ab and note 60.

6. Cf. 17/30-31 (6) and 17/32-33 (7); see also note to 5/70-71 and 58/64cd-67ab. The Kadamba Tree is the seed-syllable Vidyā of the goddess, whose energy is the Command of realization that pervades it. This Tree is the Lion and the goddess who lives in it is the lioness.

7. Cf. 17/34 (8), 17/35-6ab (9) and 17/36cd-39 (10).

8. The 'lower' Path is such in relation to the 'upper' condition of pure transcendence in which the energy of the Command is merged in the Void of the Absolute beyond the opposites. On the 'lower' Path it is the triangular syllable AIṀ within the Point in the centre of the Triangle – the 'crooked' abode of grace. Although a 'female' Triangle and Point, it is 'male' in relation to the Hexagram, its 'female' emanation. The Hexagram arises out of this triangle and, according to a variant reading, it is contained within it (candrapurodara) (see above, note to 3/15). Together, by 'the consonant action (samācāra) of Śiva and Śakti', they form the maṇḍala, which is the City of the Moon filled with the energies of the Krama taught in the YKh of the MBT consisting of 27 mantras (cf. 7/7).

9. Cf. 17/40-43ab.

10. YKh (2): The piercing (vedhana) that takes place out of the perview of the senses is Śakti. The (wise) know that it is the creative imagination (kalpana), which is the Hermitage (of the goddess).

11. Cf. 17/43cd-44 (12).

12. Cf. 17/45-46ab (13).

13. The sevenfold Stone (saptaśilā) is the Meruprastāra with its seven rows of letters.

14. The Stone of Brahmā, the creator, is the Yoni. It contains the energies of the letters that generate all mantras and words through which outer phenomena become manifest. This takes place when the Stone gives birth, as it were, to the combinations of its phomenic energies.

15. YKh (2): the latent potential (vāsanā) (of the Stone) is pure contemplation (śuddhabhāvanā).

16. Cf. 17/46cd-47cd (14).

17. 'Stability' is the liberated state, which is free of the fluctuations of the opposites implicitly represented here by the oscillation between creation and destruction. Between them is the condition of 'stability' which is conjuction with the union – Yoga – of Śiva and Śakti. The play on words here is clear. One meaning is that this is attained in the seat of Kāmarūpa, through the teachings propagated there. Another meaning is that the liberated condition of 'stability' is achieved even when engaged in willing and desiring if one is constantly immersed in a state of one-pointed concentration of the deity and the Supreme Principle.

18. Cf. 17/48 (15).

19. Cf. 17/49 (16) and concerning the Ocean see 14/64cd-65.

20. Exactly the same expression – ṣaṭprakāramahārṇava – appears above in 30/68cd. There we are told that it refers to the Six Wheels 'beginning with the Foundation up to the (one in the middle of the) eyebrows.'

21. This Transmission is the Divine Current. See chapter fifty-seven.

22. The 'navakrama' is also the sequence of the letters of Navātman, each of which is a Siddha. The correct application of this seed-syllable and the grid of letters (the Transmission of the Abyss) with the full realisation of the inner experience of all their energies is complete and perfect success in the fullest sense of the term.

23. The colophon in MS Gh says: This is the (fifty-third) chapter called Concerning the Sūtra of the Lineage (santānasūtra). It belongs to the primordial descent into the great sacrifice of the Churning Bhairava in the tradition (anvaya) that consists of seventy million (verses) that has emerged on the Path of Meru. It is on the path of the Seat of Knowledge (vidyāpīṭha) and is the ultimate purport of the Pure Six Thousand (verses) (vimalaṣaṭka) in the division beginning with `Kā' in the venerable scripture of twenty-four thousand (verses) (known as) the Svāminīmata of the Supreme Lord's command as uttered within the Transmission of the Mother (ambākrama).

NOTES OF THE TRANSLATION OF CHAPTER FIFTY-FOUR

1. The Five Praṇavas are presented in code in 8/92cd-105ab and are related to the sacred seats in 8/111cd-113. See notes there for a table of correspondences that combines the data in this chapter and there.

2. The Yoni in this case is located in the genital centre.

3. This should be the second Praṇava, which is located in the navel, not the third. The location of the third one is not mentioned here. Presumably, it is the heart centre.

4. See 6/183cd-184ab.

5. This Praṇava is called Bhairavī Vidyā above in 8/104cd-105.

6. 4. Table of Correspondences of the Five Praṇavas and the Sacred Seats

Praṇava	Colour	Seat	Location	Age	Sign
First (Vāgbhava)	White	Kāmarūpa	Centre of Yoni	Kṛta	Arousal (kṣobha)
Second	Morning sun	Jālandhara	Navel	-	Paralysis (stobha)
Third	Yellow	Pūrṇagiri	(Heart)	-	Throb of Bliss (ghūrṇi), Arousal of the Body (purakṣobha)
Fourth	Black	Tisra	Throat	End of Kali	Invisibility, Controlled Possession (vaśyāveśa)
King Bhairava	Red	Udyāna	Between the eyebrows	-	Yogic Sleep (yoganidrā)

It is not possible to establish which Ages correspond to the sacred seats. Udyāna is normally the seat of the Kṛta Age, but this has been taken over by Kāmarūpa. As usual, the text here says that Tisra is the seat that manifests at the end of the Kali Age. Normally, however, it is the fifth seat and Kāmarūpa, which is generally said to be the fourth one, is the seat of the Kali Age. As the change in the order of the seats has disrupted the usual correspondences, it is not possible to determine which Age Udyāna belongs to in this setup. One wonders why this has taken place. Is it because a need was felt to relate Vāgbhava to Kāmarūpa? Cf. above 9/20.

7. Concerning these eight yogic powers see above note to 4/41cd-42 and 8/123-124.

8. The Vidyā of the New Moon is Kubjikā's Samayā Vidyā. It becomes the Vidyā of the Full Moon by adding the Five Praṇavas to it in the beginning in the forward order and at the end in the reverse order.

NOTES OF THE SANSKRIT TEXT OF CHAPTER FIFTY-FIVE

1. This sūtra is also found in YKh (2) 25/1-19. There the reading in MS ख् is श्रीवक्रोवाच. It is missing in MS क्.

NOTES OF THE TRANSLATION OF CHAPTER FIFTY-FIVE

1. This sūtra describes how the maṇḍala of the Transmission of the Eldest should made and worshipped. It basically consists of the core of the Saṁvartāmaṇḍala. The sandals of the god, which symbolize Śiva and Śakti, are Śrīnātha in the centre. Around them is the usual downward facing triangle in the corner of which are three sacred trees. Outside the Triangle is a Hexagram on the corners of which the six Yoginīs (here called 'Mothers') starting from Ḍākinī are worshipped. The Five Praṇavas are projected into the area around the Hexagram (perhaps two on each side and one above). Their locations in the maṇḍala represent the Five Voids within five Wheels (cakra) in the body. All this is contained within a square, outer enclosure.

2. The Circle of the Yoni is the Wheel of the Self-supported (svādhiṣṭhāna). See above 21/35-36.

3. The Five Voids are within five of the Wheels in the subtle body. In order to make five fit into the usual group of six, Maṇipura, the Wheel in the navel, has been omitted. Similarly, above in 21/35-36, in order to accommodate the Five Elements into the Six Wheels, Viśuddhi, the Wheel in the throat centre has been omitted (cf. also note to 25/2-3ab).

Here the Wheels are listed from the top down, whereas the Praṇavas to which they correspond have been listed from the bottom up in the sūtra of the previous chapter. Each Wheel contains one of the Five Praṇavas, that together constitute the Five-syllable Vidyā. Just as the energies of the nine letters of Navātman (HSKṢMLVRYŪṀ) are considered to be a Void (Ṭ fol. 84a) because of their essentially transcendental, conscious nature, similarly the Five Praṇavas are Five Voids in the centre of the five Wheels in the body. The Five Voids are described in detail in notes to 25/39cd-40 in a different, although not incompatible, way. Cf. below (59/83) where we read that 'space has become fivefold by the countless divisions of the one.'

5. Table of the Locations of the Five Voids and the Praṇavas

Location of the Void	Age	Praṇavas
Wheel of the Drop (between the eyebrows)	Elder (vṛddha)	Sadāśiva
The Pure Wheel (in the throat)	Brother (bhrātṛ)	Īśvara
Heart	Father (pitṛ)	Rudra
Circle of the Yoni (in the genitals)	Grandfather (pitāmaha)	Viṣṇu
Foundation of the Root (in the base of the spine)	Greatgrandfather (prapitāmaha)	Brahmā

5. Cf. above 27/21cd and note.

6. According to the NT (7/31-32ab) says that the Place of Birth, the Root, the Belly of the Fish, the Fivefold Place and the Tortoise are all names for Mūlādhāra. Kṣemarāja explains that it is called the Tortise because its shape is like a tortoise. Externally, the 'tortoise seat' is where the officiant sits when he performs the rite. See above note 17 to 48/20-21ab.

7. YKh (2): The (sacrificial) meat is (placed) on the left in the north.

8. According to the version in YKh (2) the meat offering is placed on the left. Perhaps that is meant here.

9. Concerning the Three Trees see 46/21cd-26 and notes. We are there that the three trees are in the three corners of the downward facing triangle in the centre of Saṁvartāmaṇḍala. The Kadamba tree is in the front corner, while the Bilva and Ciñcā are in the right and left ones, respectively.

10. See below, chapter sixty-three.

NOTES OF THE SANSKRIT TEXT OF CHAPTER FIFTY-SIX

1. क्, ग्: सर्व्व

2. ग्, घ्: * चन्द्र–. ’श्री’ has been added to the beginning of the word as an honorific which is not counted when reckoning the number of syllables in the metre. See above, note to 6/211c. Cf. below, 56/2d, 3d, 4d, 11d and 14d.

3. ग्: सुन्यालयं

4. As regularly occurs in this text, male proper names are treated as neuter.
See above, 6/211c. 5. All MSs: निजपद्म–
6. क्, ग्: श्रीस्तंभदेव. See above, 6/211c.
7. क्, ख्: त्रि:कोण– 8. All MSs: –नाद्यां 9. क्: समुस्थितम्
10. See above, 6/211c. 11. All MSs: – संलीनां
12. All MSs: श्रवन्ते. The root द्रु is normally 1P but is also ātmanepada in the Epics. 13. All MSs except क्, ख्: चिच्चक्र
14. घ्, छ्: सर्व्वमुत्थानं; all other MSs: सथसुस्थानं
15. The next line in all MSs reads: विंदुस्थानं तु संभित्वा श्रीप्रयासं तु सप्तमे. A repeats line 56/7cd, it is obviously misplaced here. 16. घ्: गतोऽसो
17. This and following two lines are missing in MS ग् from भेदद्वयं to व्योमवक्त्रं
तु दीपयेत्. 18. छ्, ज्: ह्द्योमो–; झ्: द्वद्यो–
19. ख्, घ्: विर * देवं तु; छ्: विरजदेव तु; all other MSs: विरज देवं तु
20. घ्, छ्: षष्ठकम्; all other MSs: षष्ठमम्
21. Two ways of reading this compound are possible. The first is as given, the second could be –मुद्राया. This reading would leave a dependent pronoun hanging loose which although irregular syntax, sometimes occurs in the Sanskrit of this text. 22. All MSs: –प्रयासं
23. MS ग् repeats verses 56/6-7.
24. All MSs: –वक्त्रं 25. घ्, छ्: –कांसाल्यं; all other MSs: –कासाल्यं
26. All MSs: –व्योमं 27. All MSs except ख्, ज्, झ्: प्रतिष्ठासौ
28. All MSs: –धारिणं 29. ख्: –वद्रापदे 30. घ्, छ्: लीना

31. All MSs: श्रीभोगदेवीति. I have deleted ’श्री’ because, even though this is added in same cases even if it faults the metre by an extra syllable (see above, note to 6/211c), here the sandhi with the previous word indicates its original absence. Double sandhi is a common phenomenon in this text. The context precludes the possibility that भोगदेवी is the original form of the proper name.

32. घ्, छ्, ज्: स्वस्थने 33. All MSs: प्राप्तो 34. All MSs: वह्नै
35. ख्: सूर्यं; घ्, झ्: सूर्य 36. क्, झ्: गतं, घ्, छ्: गतः. The dual number would be regular. 37. घ्: भव 38. All MSs: विंवदेव्यो 39. All MSs: लवणंरसमा– 40. ग्, घ्, छ्, ज्: सून्यं 41. See above, note to 3/135d. 42. ख्: महादेव 43. छ्: प्रतिष्टोसौ
44. All MSs: श्रीखड्गे देवस्तु. See above, note to 2/211c.
45. घ्, छ्: नामस्कारां; all other MSs: नमस्कारं 46. All MSs: नमस्कृत्वा

47. Missing in all MSs except क्, ख्. I have supplied a possible restoration of the two syllables missing at the end of this line. MSs घ् reads मनो: but this seems to be a carry over from the next line.

48. Missing in MS घ्: * * निरोधनं; छ्: मनोसोनिरोधनं 49. क्, ग्: * त्वा. IM 5.

50. क्: * दशं; घ्: द्वादशं द्वादशं 51. घ्, छ्: + मेव च 52. ख्: रसानंदेव

56. All MSs except क्: –शांभव. शाम्भवावस्थायां would be correct but does not fit the metre. 57. ख्: एकोकार–; –खरूपेण
58. घ्: –स्फोटचतुर्दश; all other MSs: –स्फोटोचतुर्द्दश. See above, note to 6/211c.

NOTES OF THE TRANSLATION OF CHAPTER FIFTY-SIX

1. Concerning the Sixteen Siddhas, see 7/78 ff. These sixteen are the human Siddhas listed above in 46/133-145, cf. also 46/181-199ab. Variants of their names found there are noted as we go along. This Siddha is also called Candrābja (see above 46/181).

2. Gulmanātha is also called Vatsagulma.

151. क्: निव्योघ–; झ्: दियोघ–; all other MSs except घ्, छ्: दिव्योघ–. This line is missing in YKh (1). In every case the great majority of MSs, if not all, read words containing the word 'ogha' in sandhi with a preceding vowel as if the form were 'ugha'. We do, in fact, find this form in a some places in the Kubjikā sources (e.g. see KuKh 6/172c and 7/88c). Even so, I have chosen to emend to the normal form throughout. The reader may assume that the deviant form is the reading in the MSs unless stated otherwise. See note to KuKh 1/4b.

NOTES OF THE TRANSLATION OF CHAPTER FIFTY-SEVEN

1. This chapter of the KuKh is the same as chapter thirty-six of YKh (1).

2. Concerning these eighteen see above 2/20-26 and notes and intro. vol. 2, p. 582 for a chart of the names of these eighteen found in this chapter and those there. When the names differ, they are noted in brackets next to the headings.

3. See note to 59/4.

4. At the lower, immanent level, the goddess has a form, although, of course, it is not a physical one. All the states and energies in the sphere of her emanation, including the highest most subtle energies and principles, are 'forms' of the goddess. Thus each one of these eighteen energies are aspects of the one supreme energy, namely, the Transmental. Although ordered in a 'sequence' – krama – they are equally the same energy which is the goddess who leads directly to the supreme state in which she is immersed.

From one point of view the Transmental is the cosmogonic will, which is the energy and source of emanation – the Yoni – that issues forth as the Divine Current in all its phases and aspects. From another point of view, it is the energy of the one transcendental being. As such it is 'established in the Void'. Here the Transmental is the goddess 'devoid of form'. Or, to be more precise, her form has been 'nivartita-' that is, 'suppressed', 'brought to an end' or 'turned away'. She is the supreme transcendental reality from which, as the Upaniṣad says, mind, 'turns away' (nivartate) because it cannot reach it. Thus the Transmental – unmanī – 'beyond mind' is 'established in the Void' of the absolute, transcendental reality from which mind 'turns away' and ceases.

The second account (57/58) stresses, as does this one, that the Transmental is the pure consciousness which is deity immersed in the contemplation of its supremely blissful nature. Ineffable oneness, all duality, including the identity of the Transmental itself dissolves away into this Bliss.

5. The second account of this aspect of the Transmental stresses its immanent pervasive nature (57/59). Extending from Śiva to Earth it spans the entire range of immanence, the sacred and profane, even as it maintains its grounding in its essential transcendental nature. Mātaṅgī, the Sweeper who is not bound by the dichotomy of pure and impure, represents this condition well.

Thus in the first phase, although the Transmental has emerged from pure transcendence beyond the opposites, its transcendental nature dominates, in this phase, the aspect of immanence in which the Transmental is 'the abode of (all that is) emitted'.

Mātaṅgī is Juṣṭacaṇḍālī (49/36), the form of the goddess described above in chapter forty-nine.

6. Mālinī resides in the End of the Twelve. Thus, the Twelve Flames may be the twelve phases of the development of Sound that constitute it represented by the twelve vowels. (cf, above (40/121-122 and TS 1/442 quoted in note to 41/34cd) where the vowels are called 'great flames' (mahānila).

From the End of the Twelve, Mind Beyond Mind leads upwards to the End of Sixteen, the secret maṇḍala of the liberated Śāmbhava plane.

7. Mātaṅgī / Juṣṭacaṇḍalī 'roars (making a) sound like that of (thunder) clouds' (49/33).

The Sound of (Thunder) Clouds (meghaśabda) is the eighth in a series of ten sounds heard as the yogi progresses to the supreme state (36/60-63). Perhaps it is not just a coincidence that 'Meghanāda' is the last of the Bodhisattva's stages (bhūmi) of development just prior to his entry into the perfectly enlightened condition of a Buddha.

8. YKh (1): 'whose form is the womb' (garbhavigrahā).

9. The Equal One, according to the second account, is the supreme repose of the experience of the universal and transcendental 'equality', that is, the oneness of the Transmental (57/60-61ab) that is equally present in both transcendental Śiva and immanent Śakti, Akula and Kula, contained in the oneness of Kaula, their union.

10. YKh (1): 'from the 'crooked body', that is, from the Triangle. Just as Mind Beyond Mind is the 'abode of all that is emitted' in relation to the more transcendental Transmental 'above' it, here the Pervasive One is transcendental ('devoid of metaphysical principles') in relation to the Equal One who, manifest 'prior (to all things)', marks the initial phase of emanation. Both are equally immanent and transcendent from their own perspectives (as, indeed, are all the phases of the Divine Current), however the Pervasive One awakens in a special way to pure transcendental 'Non-being' (57/61-62ab) which the yogi should contemplate constantly (57/29-30) and is the knowledge that illumines the Supreme Reality (57/31-34) and is the teaching of the Divine Current (57/37cd-38ab).

11. This is the name also found above (2/21cd-25). Below (57/62cd-63ab), this energy is called Śāmbhavī.

12. We are told below that the goddess of this phase is Śāmbhavī. Just as all the phases are aspects of the Transmental, they are also aspects of the Command which is the energy of the Transmental applied to the transformation of lower states into the highest Śāmbhava one, which is that of the Transmental itself as the pure condition of the Śiva principle. Thus this process of transformation is one of 'conjunction' to the supreme Śiva principle which is the function of the Transmental, especially in its aspect as Mind Beyond Mind. This is the 'last born' – the extreme end of the gamut of states and levels that, like a sweeper who sweeps up impure refuse, it gathers together dispersed duality into the Mind. This is then eliminated by conjoining it with the oneness Beyond Mind, which is the power of consciousness that consumes diversity and thus purifies the Śiva principle of all duality.

13. The name Nandinī is here loosely derived from 'nistaraṅga' – 'waveless' and 'nabha' – 'sky',

14. Called Nādinī below (57/63cd-64ab), Nandinī is the resonance of the energy that courses through the Kula, that is, the aggregate of all the principles, energies and every form of their manifestation contained in the Triangle. From her perspective this Great Path along which she moves is the one reality, undivided, unchanging, and limitless like the sky. Thus the process of unification begun in the previous phase is here complete by the contemplation in this way of the 'stainless Self' (ibid.).

15. YKh (1): 'has become sevenfold'.

16. See above, note to 26/75. The 'stainless Self' which is contemplated in the previous aspect assumes the dynamic active condition of the 'churner' in this one. The Yoga of Churning the Centre according to the account below generates the Fire of consciousness that burns with the energy of the traces of duality in its supreme state embedded in oneness. We may presume that the Light of the seventh and highest Wheel which is specifically said to be 'smokeless' is this Fire that burns, emanating its energy 'upwards' (57/64-65ab). Here we are told that it is generated by the churning of Śiva and Śakti, the Sun and Moon represented by the letters Ha and KṢa. In the Void between them emerges the Yoni of Fire here called 'triple syllable' a synonym of the much more common expression 'triple peak' (trikūṭa) we have already come across a number of times.

This Triangle is the grid filled with letters from which all mantras and words are generated. The total number of mantras through which the cosmic order and all it contains is created it is commonly said to be seventy million. The 'utterance' of the mantras in the grid of letters takes place by the spontaneous combination of the letters within it. In this perspective, individual mantras 'emerge' or are 'extracted' from it differenting them from the others contained in the form of their essential phonemic energies in the grid. Mantras are not created. They shift from the unmanifest condition within the prastāra to the manifest one outside it.

The condition of mantra is 'sevenfold' because the letters in the Meruprastāra are divided into seven rows. As Meru is the essence and source of mantra, they all share in their essential condition in its sevenfold character. The seven parts of the Meruprastāra – the 'imperishable' letter E are here understood to correspond to the Six Wheels and the supreme principle beyond them represented by the letter A at the apex of the triangular Meru. Its radiance generates the Triangle, thus explaining in yet another way the Yonis self-perpetuating dynamism.

17. Herukā is called Pheruka. See above 2/20-26 and note 108 of the Sanskrit text of chapter two.

18. Below Herukā is identified with Kālī who 'bestows the state of oneness (sāmarasya)' (57/65cd-66ab). There she does it by the power of the Command. Here we are told that she successively manifests as all three domains of perception – the subject, who is consciousness, the means of knowledge which is the mind and the senses and the object of thought, which may be both purely ideal or a mental representation of an external object. Here again then, in another modality, we travel back to immanence from the transcendent marking another pulse in the oscillation of the Wave of the Divine Current as it flows, rising and falling (from the point of view of immanence), without waxing or waning (from the point of view of transcendence).

19. Kṣuradhārā (the Razor's Edge), called Bhāṣā below (57/66cd-67ab) and Samayākṣī and Samaya above in chapter two (2/20-26), reafirms the plane of the transcendental source of all the energies, symbolized by the first letter of the alphabet which is in the 'seventh Wheel'. Here she is portrayed as emerging from the Equal One. Her purity implies that this emergence is not downwards into manifestation. Instead she emerges upwards into transcendence beyond the 'impurity' of duality and the temporality it entails and so is 'devoid of arising and falling away' (57/66cd-67ab). The 'vulgar' form of the previous phase in contact with the objects of sense generated states of consciousness through this contact. Here consciousness arises directly from the goddess's innate, transcendental nature free of contact with a seemingly outer, distinct reality that impinges on it. On the contrary, she pours out into the universe, filling it with consciousness and thus arousing it to activity.

20. Below, the goddess at this stage of the unfolding of the Divine Current is called Jambhalā (57/67cd-68ab). This is the name of a female demon (rākṣasī) who is worshipped by women to get pregnant. Her name may be derived in two ways. One may be as a cognate of the word 'jambhana-' which means sexual intercourse. It is more likely that it is related to the root jambh the sense of which is 'opening the jaws wide' or 'snapping' and the related root jṛṁbh in the sense of 'yawning' or 'opening the mouth wide'. Her birth from 'roaring laughter' (which issues from a 'wide open mouth') that destroys the worlds, seems to confirm the latter (loose) derivation. Like the other goddesses she is in the liminal state in which the Divine Current flows between immanence and transcendence. There, as Jambhalā, she is Kālī, who consumes the plurality of the energies that operate in the sphere of immanence, by absorbing them into the oneness of transcendence (57/67cd-68ab).

21. Kālakarṣī is the name of the goddess here according to the passage below (57/68cd-69ab). Kālakarṣī, that is, Kālasaṁkarṣiṇī (she who draws Time – the Supreme Principle – into herself), is the form of Kālī who presides over the Kashmiri Kālīkrama and a major part of the Kālī Mata of the Jayadrathayāmala. Identified with the New Moon, she embodies the aspect of the energy of consciousness that consumes binding diversity epitomised as ‘time’. Although not named specifically here, the description of the goddess of this phase fits with Kālasaṁkarṣiṇī’s character and nature.

In the account found in the second half of this chapter she is the goddess of the eleventh phase of the Divine Current. However, here the ‘eleventh descent’ into the Triangle from the transcendent beyond is that of the ‘young mother Kujā’. There she takes her place, in the form of a ‘spark of light’, as the Point in the centre of the Triangle. Kālakarṣī is the ‘the violent (caṇḍa) sound (rāvā) (that resounds) at the End of the Twelve’. Here she is described as an all–consuming fiery Light and there as terrible, violently destructive Sound.

22. 'Trikūṭa' is a name of the Triangle in the End of the Twelve which has three peak-syllables on its corners. See above, note to 7/34-5ab.

23. Although Kālī’s devouring, consuming presence is strongly felt in the remaining phases of the flow of the Divine Current, she is not so ‘extremely ferocious’ anymore. Mother Kujā shines in the centre of the Triangle of the matrix of energies of the Transmental. Below, she is called Cañcalā (57/69cd) – the Playful One – who although she ‘passionately desires to devour the universe’ does not yet do so. Now she is in the Triangle of Birth, the Western House. There Kālakarṣī is born as the gentle virgin Kālikā in the thirteenth phase. Even though she is the consuming Doomsday Fire, Saṁvartā, below she is called Aghorā – the Benign One (57/70ab). She is said to be ‘bhimā’ – ‘terrible’ – but she is the energy of bliss (ānanadaśakti) the ‘beautiful terrible one’ – subhīmā – of the Saṁvartāsūtra (1/1). In the fourteenth phase she is the Maheśvarī, the Divine Will that leads beyond to liberation. Beyond the polarities of Śiva, the Sun and Śakti, the Moon, she is not the fierce raging Fire that violently consumes, instead, she blissfully ‘cuts through fettered existence’. Below, however, as Trailokyā (her more common name), she is presented as the cause of the ‘calamity’ of the ‘cage made of despair' (57/70cd-71ab).

24. This is the name of this goddess mentioned below (57/71cd-72ab). She is also called Vinaya or Vijaya (2/20-26).

25. The seventeenth energy of the New Moon is identified with ’moonlight’ (see above 3/43) that shines ’darkly’ in the moonless night like ’blue collyrium’.

26. Called Ekavīrā below (57/72cd-73ab) and Vinaya or Vijaya elsewhere (2/20-26), she is said to be in the Cavity of the Root. This is the Triangle at the End of the Twelve which serves as the base of the Liṅga of the Void where she shine darkly as the Moonlight of the New Moon. She is thus the energy of the Will of Kula, that is, the Yoni, that pervades the phases of the penetration of Śiva and Śakti that takes place perpetually in the Void (57/71cd-73ab).

27. The energy of the Will that flows through the transcendental union that takes place in the the fifteenth phase expands out again into the Kula, that is, the Triangle with its triple sonic energy. Called Karaṅkinī below she emerges out of the oneness of the transcendental Void into the immanent sphere of the opposites with her partner Kuraṅgīśa thereby engendaring the expansion of the Light of consciousness through the Triangle and the universe emitted from it (57/73cd-74ab).

28. Called Carcikā below (57/74cd-75ab) Kālikā is the 'Moonlight (candrikā) at the End of the Twelve', the seventeenth digit of the Moon, which is, appropriately the seventeenth phase of the flow of the Divine Current. The Full Moon is the Point and the New Moon is the Half Moon below it where she resides as the subtle 'half energy'. She is Kula, that is, the Yoni that emerged through the expansion of the previous phase. Here the process is completed by the installation in the centre of the energy of the Moon that generated it and the emergence in the following of her partner, the Sun. Repleat with the energies of the Moon, the Yoni is now the City of the Moon, the complete maṇḍala.

The phases of the flow of the Divine Current mark the progressive emergence of the lunar energies as the Moon moves through its phases. In the previous phase the Moon is full with all its sixteen energies, in this one it is in its most subtle state as the 'hidden half energy' of the New Moon which is the source of all the energies. Finally, now the lunar current has run its course and dissolves away into transcendental Emptiness, Night gives way to Day with the dawning of the Sun of the Light of consciousness. Thus the Transmission of the Skyfarer is complete and the Path of Mantra reaches its destination resonant with the Five Kulas of the Praṇavas, that mark the conclusion of all empowered mantras.

30. See note to 57/86cd-87ab.

31. In one sense the Path of Mantra is the teaching of the Kubjikā Tantras as a whole or, in particular, that of the Transmission of the Skyfarers (57/28). It is also the channel through which the Command as the energies of the letters and mantras spreads through the maṇḍala. Ultimately only the Vidyā of the goddess moves on this Path (62/93) assuming the form of all mantras as it does so. As such the goddess is the leader of this Path who presides over the Transmission and has universal authority over all things (63/9). She saves all fettered souls from bondage (67/37) by this Path although, ultimately, perfect liberation is beyond all means, even the Path of Mantra (68/75).

32. Cf. 13/56. Concerning the contemplation of Non-being, see above note to 40/93, 40/151 ff. and Dyczkowski 2004: 51-64.

33. The Rudras and the others preside over the energies of the letters which, in this fettered modality, are those of the deluding power of Mahāmāyā. As the Transmission of the Divine Current is beyond Speech, they cannot understand the teaching that concerns it.

34. Presumably, the ‘triple Void’ is the triangular Yoni. The Cave is the Void within it. The three Voids are the corners.

35. The Jñānatilaka also refers to Non-being as a ‘lamp’ (Dyczkowski 2004: 62)

36. I suppose that ‘the end of the Triple Void’ is supreme state beyond the Yoni, which is the Triple Void.

37. The ‘triple purification’ concerns the three Principles of the Self, Vidyā and Śiva that span the entire range of the thirty-six principles.

38. The same is said below of Carcikā, the goddess of the seventeenth phase of the Divine Current (57/74cd-75ab).

39. See chapter 13 where the goddess as Mahāmāyā is described in the same way as both binding and liberating.

40. Represented by the Half Moon, the Wick is the Command and so is also sometimes called the Wick of the Command (ājñāvarti) that burns with the flame (śikhā) of Kuṇḍalinī (see 7/42). The Wick of the navel is Kuṇḍalinī (30/48cd-49ab). It is the Half Measure (ardhamātra) ‘wrapped in the creepers’ of the three measures of sonic energy (see intro. vol. 1, p. 382-386).

41. The Flower is the product of the union of Śiva and Śakti. It is the Oḍḍiyāna, the first of the sacred seats. In the centre of the goddess’s Triangle, it is the Drop. In chapter two of the KRU we read:

> The Great Seat (mahāpīṭha) originated, O mistress of the heroes, where the Flower originated from the union of the two (Śiva and Śakti). It is the middle (seat) and is located in the centre, O dear one, and accompanied by its own energy, is called the `Flower' by name.
>
> O supreme mistress, it is said to be the pervasive lord of the sacred seat who, in the said Primordial Seat, bears (his) own name. O Rudrā, O supreme Goddess, one should know that it is endowed with his own power.

42. See note to 57/23cd-24 with reference to 57/72cd-73ab.

43. The body of Kula is made of the energies of the letters (see note to 2/32). It is ‘threefold’ as the triangular Yoni.

44. Above (2/20cd-21ab = 35/92cd-93ab) the Divine Current, also called the Transmission of the Eighteen, is presented as consisting of four groups of four, five, six and three divisions. Here it seems that it is analysed into five groups consisting of three, one, three, five and six phases.

45. As each of the phases in the flow of the Divine Current is a 'flower', it also called the Convention of the Flowers. Below (57/103cd-104ab) a 'Flower' is defined as: 'the oneness of the equality of the fluctuations of the mind that (is transmitted from each) Flower (to the next) within the Void (antarikṣa) devoid of (outer phenomenal) support when worshipping the transmission of the Divine Current.'

Broadly speaking, there are two Flowers – Śiva and Śakti. Here the former is identified with Liṅga Bhairava who, as Navātman, consists of the Nine Persons who govern the letters of which it is composed. The other Flower is the goddess Khañjī, who consists of the seventeen Flowers of the Divine Current. These are the energies of the Moon and may correspond to the seventeen syllables of Kālī's Vidyā here as they do in the Kālīkrama.

46. Now that consciousness has risen beyond the Transmental to the Space of Being which the plane of realisation and the Command itself, the Divine Current emerges spontaneously from it by its own power and descends down again through its eighteen levels and so they are described again.

47. Refer to the notes of the previous description of the phases of the Divine Current for a brief comparision of the two accounts.

48. YKh (1): (Śambhu's Command) is consciousness in Kula and Akula (cit kulākule).

49. The name of the goddess of this plane of the Divine Current is not mentioned here but is implied. See 2/20-26.

50. I understand 'paravāsana', which literally means 'supreme latent trace' or 'tendency', to be the energy of consciousness. Just as the latent traces of past action in individual consciousness instigate further action this 'supreme latent trace' within absolute consciousness stimulates its work, which is that of burning up duality.

51. YKh (1): māyā

52. The readings of the MSs of YKh (1) suggest an original: layotpatteś ca [k, gh, ṅ: layotpatti ma; g: layotpatte ma] cetanā – (She is Māyā) the awareness of the merger and arising (of all things).

53. Here, I suppose, the term 'kalā' denotes both kinds of energy, one undifferentiated and the other differentiated. The goddess Kālī embodies the former and, as such, absorbs into herself all the differentiated energies – kalā – of consciousness.

54. Cf. 1/11a.

55. Fire here stands for the principle of Passion (kāmatattva). See appendix VI of vol. 2 of the edition and translation concerning the Principles of Passion, Poison and the Stainless. These are three moments or aspects of the union or mutual 'penetration' (āveśa) of Śiva (= Akula) and Śakti (= Kula) reflected in the union of Siddha and the Yoginī.

56. This goddess is also called Vinayā (see 2/20-26). This injunction implies, it seems, a didactic etymology of this name.

57. See above 13/76cd ff. and 18/63cd ff.

58. Carcikā is the name the goddess assumes after she has come out of the Liṅga and, having graced Bhairava, operates in the Mālinī Kula as the Command (see 3/165cd-167). Carcikā can therefore be said to be the most immanent of the seventeen aspects of the Command that make up this part of the Divine Current. As such Carcikā is another name of the goddess Kubjikā (see 3/70-1). In some lists of these seventeen she is called Ciñcinī, a much more common homonym of the goddess Kubjikā. Above she is called Khañjī and identified with Liṅga Bhairava (57/49cd-50ab). Out of the seventeen, this is the goddess who comes into the world and is worshipped as Śrīnātha's consort.

59. YKh (1): you and I are both knowledge and its object.

60. See below 57/87cd-88 and note.

61. Bhairavī is the goddess of the Kula, the Yoni and so is called Kaulinī. She abides within the Point in the centre. Although she remains immersed within her own infinite transcendental being, she pervades the Kula, that is, the Triangle. In this context the Yoni is Bhairava (cf. below, note 7 chapter 58) who contains her as she plays within him as the pulse of the bliss of the Transmental flowing back and forth through its eighteen phases.

62. The name 'Bhairavī' is here derived from vamate – 'emits' and ramet – 'sports'. Cf. Dyczkowski 1986: 7, with reference to TĀ 1/96-100ab.

63. The following passage up to verse 91 describes the origin of the Tradition as the scriptures through which it is transmitted, especially the MBT, that is, the Caturviṁśasahasra (the Scripture consisting of of Twenty-four Thousand verses). This originates, as does the stream of emanation, from the 'churning', first of the Goddess as the pure Will and then as the Ocean of the Yoni (see 17/35-36ab and note). The process is initiated by the awareness (cetas) in the Pure Will. Turned inwards, immanent Being rests in a state of oneness with the Absolute Void. Directed outwards, it arouses – 'churns' – the Will. This assumes a dual form. One is Kula, that is, the Triangle (58/14) of the matrix of energies of the Transmental that are the source – Yoni – of emanation. Full of these energies, it is the City of the Moon. Hidden within the lunar Point in the centre is the New Moon, the other aspect of the Will, which is the potential source of all the energies. This is the Doomsday Fire that burns at the bottom of the Ocean of the Yoni. Burning in the Circle of the Drop (bindumaṇḍala) in the centre of the Yoni, the goddess declares that it is both the (immanent) 'life breath of the mind' and the (transcendental) Skyfarer who is the liberated Self. Initially, an entirely female Yoni, the goddess takes a partner by 'bringing him down' into the Yoni. But he is not present there, as one would expect, as the Drop of seed in the centre, commonly equated with the Liṅga. That is the goddess's place. She is the (normally male) 'thunderbolt' and the god is the Ocean of the Yoni that it 'churns' and burns with the Fire of the Will from which emanation and the scriptures proceed.

64. The fivefold state consists of the five Kulas that 'resound' within the Fourth state above the Light of consciousness beyond merger (57/27). These, I suppose, are the five states or energies in the Liṅga. The 'shade' is the seventeenth energy of the Moon that radiates from the Point out to assume the form of the maṇḍala (58/69cd-70ab), here represented by Śiva.

The Crooked Form is the Doomsday Fire (saṁvartā) that burns in the midst of the Ocean of Letters filling them with energy. It is represented by the conjunct consonant KṢa, which is written behind the letter Ha in the centre of the Triangle of letters (see note 11 of chapter 8). In the centre of the maṇḍala between them is the Point. 'Churned' by the 'force of the mind' it emits the stream of letters in the flux of the energy of Kuṇḍalinī that issues from it. The 'force of the mind' is the power of visualization, the creative imagination. Initially, this is imagined by the adept in the course of his Yogic practice. Eventually, his individual mind and its power of imagination merges with the operation of the higher mind – the goddess who is the energy of consciousness. Then this process is experienced as that of reality itself. It is the energy of the Transmental that assumes these spiritual sonic forms of the Letters by its own will and inherent power. The application of this power in this way is called 'churning'. Like 'churning' it is a dynamic, recurrent process. Like milk when it is churned produces butter, similarly, the ocean of the goddess's energies, embodied in the god, produces the scripture and with it the tradition in its highest most essential aspect as the Divine Current of the Command that flows out in this way from the sacred Point in the very centre of the god's being. How this takes place is decribed in the following verses.

65. Cf. above 57/83cd-84ab where the goddess declares that she is the Self.

66. In order to churn the Ocean a base is required on which to place the churning rod, which in this case is the Vajra of the Void that blazes with the Goddess's Fire (57/82cd-83ab). The former is the Tortoise Seat which in the body is located in the navel (60/2, see also 48/20-21ab, and 55/7). Analogously, in the Ocean of the Yoni is the Point in the centre of the Saṁvartāmaṇḍala in the End of the Twelve. The entire cosmic order is contained within it in a potential state in the form of the 'single principle' which is the Point.

According to the well known Purāṇic myth of the Churning of the Milky Ocean, Viṣṇu assumed the form of a tortoise for this purpose and Ananta, the serpent on which he rests, became the rope, In this case, the rope is the female snake Kuṇḍalinī, who embodies Time. Thus, above we are told that, moving in Suṣumṇā, the Cavity of Space between the breaths, 'slender, her limbs beautifully variegated by time and moment, she awakens to (ultimate) reality' (KuKh 2/5) (cf. above 2/4cd-6ab).

67. Concerning Matsyendranātha as a fisherman, see intro. vol. 2, p. 321 and TĀ 1/7.

68. The Couple pulsate with the bliss of the rhythmn of their union at the 'supreme limit' of immanence that borders on the sphere of transcendence. In the downward flow they lead out to emanation; in the upward flow they are the way into the Divine Current that streams through and up into the liberated Śāmbhava state. At each phase of the flow union takes place between the goddess of that phase and her Lord. These conjunctios are aspects of the one culminating conjunctio that takes place at the end of the series between Śrīnātha and the Goddess where immanence flows out of transcendence. This reflects in its turn the total oneness at the beginning of the series where the polarities are perfectly fused and hence do not manifest.

These pairs are worshipped together as a couple in the mantras that invoke each phase. Thus the names of the latter are listed next.

69. See above, 2/27 and note.

70. Each of the eighteen phases is the goddess and so is both a Flower and the Flower. Each is an aspect of the Command which is transmitted from 'Flower to Flower'. See above 57/49cd-50ab.

NOTES OF THE TRANSLATION OF CHAPTER FIFTY-EIGHT

1. This chapter is the same as chapter twenty-eight of YKh (1). We come across three versions of the Root Sūtra above in chapters 26, 38 and 42. See also chapter twenty-six of the AS which also deals with the Command of the Plane and is related to the Root Sūtra.

2. Concerning the double meaning of the word 'bhūmikā' as both 'explanation' and 'plane of being or realisation', see note to 59/4.

3. YKh (1) reads instead: 'the group of six sacred seats' (pīṭhaṣaṭka). This variant reading suggests that the main group of six is the group of six sacred seats. This makes sense. The six seats are located in the corners of the hexagram that surrounds the triangle that constitutes the core of the goddess's maṇḍala. A hexagram consists of two triangles – one facing down and the other facing up – superimposed on one another. The downward facing triangle is the Yoni and the upward facing one is the Liṅga. Thus the two represent the union of the goddess and the god, the Yoni and the Liṅga which is, as the text tells us, sixfold and contains the six sacred seats. From this union all things are generated and so is said to be the universal cause of all things. The essential nature of the conjunctio is the bliss experienced within it, that is, within the feminine. This is the inner potential state that contains and is the source of the hexagram which represents the outer manifest form of the conjunctio.

The inner conjunction takes place within the Yoni which is the Triangle with the syllable AIṀ in the centre. The hexagram that surrounds it represents the consciousness of the bliss experienced in the Yoni when union takes place. This chapter describes this inner state – bhūmikā – of the Root, that is, the syllable AIṀ and the 'sūtra', the surrounding Triangle that together make up the most essential part of the maṇḍala (58/12cd-13).

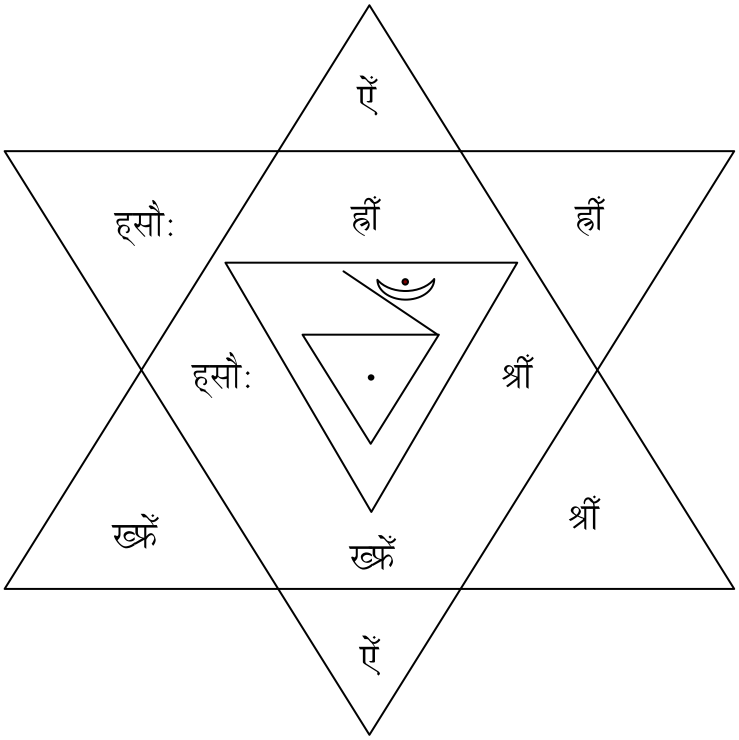
Diagram 3. The Yoniliṅga: the Ādyapīṭha



5. See note to 7/4-5ab. The black colour symbolizes the unmanifest, that is, the ‘unillumined’ condition of the transcendental Void. This is the domain of the dark aspect of the goddess where she is Kālikā (the Little Black Virgin), the New (‘Black’) Moon hidden within Bhairava, whose body is the black, moonless sky. This is the primordial, original sacred seat of the deity, the Triangle of the hidden moon in the centre of which is the Yoni that contains all the archetypal energies of the letters, seed-syllables and mantras. This state is represented by the syllable AIṀ to which are added the Five Praṇavas. Together these six are the Liṅga of Space (ākāśaliṅga) whose six aspects, each a Liṅga of Space in its own right, are described below (58/43cd-54). See notes to 58/70cd-72ab, 83cd-84ab, 60/3, 31-32ab.

This chapter presents a series of verbal images of the Triangle and the syllable AIṀ. The presentation is intentionally cryptic in order to keep the teaching secret. This is achieved by naming what are essentially the same ‘things’ in many ways. The Five Praṇavas are probably arranged around Vāgbhava in the manner they are arranged around the fire pit when they are represented by their icons. Four are in the primary directions and the fifth, Sadāśiva, in the middle. See 34/51-52ab and diagram in note. The account returns repeatedly to this basic configuration, examining its parts and the relationship they have with one another.

6. Diagram 4. The Bhagīśa Liṅga (1)

7. The transcendental Darkness represented by the Triangle is the divine body of the Goddess. It is the Sky, that is, the Void from which the Liṅga in which she resides emerges. Normally, the goddess emerges from the god. In this case, it seems that this basic model is reversed, but this is not really so. The transcendental Yoni generates another Yoni. This is the immanent 'male' Yoni, the Liṅga Bhagīśa. Also called the Wheel of Meru, it is the Point within the Triangle that encompasses it.

8. In order to understand this and what follows, it is necessary to remember the basic principle that the container is the contained and that they emerge from one another even as they merge back into each other in the dynamism of the Emptiness from which the universe of words and their objects emanates. Thus here we are told that the original Void, the Great Cave, is 'contained' in the Liṅga emitted from it.

The Great Cave is the Point above the Half Moon. It represents the essentially transcendental emptiness of Bhagīśa Liṅga, the Point. This is the place of the Moon in the Cave. The Moon in the Cave is the Point, the Lord of the Cave. Thus the container – the Void – and its content – the Point – are one.

The Point (Bindu) is the Full Moon and the Half Moon (Ardhacandra) is the New Moon. The Full Moon drips its nectarine energies into the New Moon even as the Full Moon emerges out of the New Moon. Thus the two nourish one another.

10. 'Above' is equivalent to 'within', or 'at the innermost extremity' (antataḥ). Bhairava as the first teacher is the Lord Guhānātha who is within the Cave and so too within the Moon which is within the Void. Then 'above' him, that is 'within' him is the goddess who is the energy of his saving grace. She is Maheśvarī who, along with Brahmāṇī, Vaiṣṇavī (who is Vāmā), Raudrī, and Jyeṣṭhā, is one of the five energies that are aspects of the Root, that is the Supreme Energy represented by AIṀ (58/19-22ab).

11. Cf. 58/56cd-57ab and 95cd-96ab.

12. One of the names of Vāgbhava (AIṀ) is 'Skull' identified with Śiva (58/41cd-43ab). 13. Cf. 58/17-18ab. 14.

The goddess who is above all is also the foundation at the base of all. She is the Void that is not only the Yoni – the container – and the Liṅga it contains, she is also the supporter and the supported. She is both the goddess and the 'omnipresent Lord'. This union of opposites is symbolized by the presence of the syllable AIṀ within the Point in the centre of the Triangle. This Point is the same Point that crowns the syllable AIṀ, that is, its innermost part, which is its energy – the goddess – and its highest, transcendental aspect – the Void. This is the Great Cave that contains the Point of the Moon, which by the same logic, is also AIṀ. The 'great Void' is the Point itself, the essence of AIṀ, here called the Cavity that is identified with AIṀ the 'great letter' which is the 'mind' – citta – and energy of the transcendental Void. This is the Liṅga of Space here identified with the Root. Its expansion in three directions generates the 'body' of the goddess, which is the Triangle of the same AIṀ. This is Meru, which is the Sūtra consisting of the triple power (will, knowledge and action) of the Void and the current of the three sacred seats in the corners. Thus, the Sūtra is the Triangle 'with three divisions' called the 'three maṇḍalas' (58/17-18ab) that emerge from the Cavity by its expansion (prasara) of which it is the container.

Again, the Point (containing AIṀ) is Akula (Bhairava, the Lord of the Island) and Kula is the Triangle (= the Island) (concerning the relation of Kula and Akula to the Triangle, see above 39/21 ff.). Akula is the energy of the Cavity which is the inner outpouring (udbhava) of bliss that generates the outward flow of emanation and so is called the Wheel of Emanation. In short, AIṀ is contained within its own Point, which is the Emptiness within the Triangle (which is Emptiness) that is its own body.

15. The sequence of the 'six times six' is projected into the corners of the Hexagram formed by the outpouring of the three energies at the corners of the Yoni. Groups of six represent the 'condensed' outpouring of the flux of emanation that streams from the Yoni. Several times in the following account we are told in various ways that the Triangle is in the middle of the Hexagram by saying that it is in the middle of the group of six. For example, the Triangle is the 'great Liṅga' within the 'group of six' (58/22ab). The 'groups of six' and the Hexagram that contains them and marks their deployment in space represent the fundamental archetypes of the manifest world, body and living beings. The Triangle, on the other hand, contains the original potencies that form into the archetypes and so is the source of emanation of which its energies are aspects.

16. Diagram 7. The Pyramid of Meru

17. Instead of 'abode' (ālayam) YKh (1) reads 'ocean' (ārṇavam) reminding us that this is the Ocean of the Yoni.

18. Meru is the Triangle full of the energies of the letters. Here it is identified with Bhairava who is the consort of Ciñciṇī, that is, Śrīnātha, the First Teacher. The centre of Meru is the Point that contains the Root, that is, AIṀ, the Supreme Energy and fecund Void of divine consciousness. When the two are united, everything is contained within the Yoniliṅga – the Void and the Point – in a potential form as the aspects of the energy of Emptiness. 'By blocking Śiva and Śakti', that is, by separating them within the conjunctio of the Void into distinct polarities (Ciñciṇī and Bhairava), the flow of emanation and mental consciousness that moves between them, as it were, is released to flow down into the 'lower path' of immanence. Thus the Triangle, or to be more precise, the pyramid of Meru is formed, which is Bhairava, with the Root, which is his Supreme Energy in the centre, that is, on the peak of the pyramid surrounded by the sixteen lunar energies of the vowels.

19. Diagram 8. The Six Energies of *Vāgbhava

20. The Root Energy – Parā assumes the form of two parallel triads and so 'resides in three maṇḍalas'. One is Brahmāṇī, Vaiṣṇavī and Raudrī, the energies or 'Mothers' of Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Rudra, who create, preserve and destroy (58/17-19). The other triad consists of Jyeṣṭhā, Vāmā and Raudrī (58/24-26). The former are the goddesses of the three energies above the triangular body of Vāgbhava and the latter those of the sides of the Triangle. They are reflections, as it were, of one another such that what is outside is also within.

The names of the three aspects of this energy are in accord with the three domains in which it operates. The first is Śāmbhava, which pertains to Śiva. The second is called Śākta, which pertains to Śiva's power. The third is Āṇava, which pertains to the individual soul (27-28). Again, the Supreme Energy has two aspects. Inwardly, she is in her unmanifest, potential state. As such, she is the energy of the vowels (svaramātrā), which is the energy of the New Moon. Externally she is 'generated from the Wheel of the Vowels' that is, as the lunar maṇḍala of the sixteen vowels and is the Full Moon. She is then identified, appropriately, with Brahmāṇī, the first of the eight Mothers who governs the sixteen vowels.

21. The five groups of 5, 5, 5, 4 and 5 together make twenty-four. Perhaps these are the Principles contained in Prakṛti with which the Liṅga is identified. When the goddess appears out of the Liṅga she is called Vāmā because she extends her left hand (KMT 2/3-5, quoted in intro. vol. 1, p. 38). Here she is the 'deity of the left' because she governs the left side of the Triangle, just as Raudrī's energy lines the right side of it. The 'great' Liṅga is the Triangle within 'the group of six', that is, within the Hexagram in which the Krama and every other 'group of six' is projected. Sixteen letters line each side of the Triangle. The remaining two – Ha and KṢa – are placed to the left and right of the Point in the centre of it. These are 'small' Liṅgas. The sixteen vowels line the left line of the triangle. The consonants from Ka to Ta line the right side and those from Tha to Sa are arranged along the line above to form the House of the Yoginī (7/13-15ab). Note that Vāmā governs the vowels as does Brāhmī, which suggests their identity, which is in fact the case. (see 35/82). At the same Brāhmī is the aspect of the goddess in the Point in the centre of the Triangle who is filled with the lunar energies of the vowels. Brāhmī / Vaiṣṇavī and Raudrī, on the left and right sides of the Triangle are the energies of the Moon and the Sun, respectively (35/82). These are the two 'inner principles' of the great Liṅga represented by the two letters Ha and KṢa. Ha stands for emanation. Vaiṣṇavī within it 'nourishes' it, feeding it with its energy. The letter KṢa represents destruction. Raudrī is linked to both Ha and KṢa, as is Vaiṣnavī, but is dominantly concerned with the activity of KṢa, which is withdrawal and the production of duality. Ha and KṢa represent Śakti and Bhairava, the polarities emerging from the centre separated by Raudrī, the energy that divides, blocks and destroys.

22. Jyeṣṭhā is the energy who is 'above' and so is Parā (cf, 58/24cd-25ab), the transcendental source of emanation. She is the energy of Suṣumṇā that links the flow and activity of the energies on the left and right to form a harmonious unity – a single self-sustaining process. Vāmā is her immanent (aparā) aspect that emanates the universe within her and, as Vaiṣṇavī, 'nourishes the flow' of emanation (58/21). Raudrī in the previous triad, blocks and destroys the universe. Here she also destroys but in this aspect she destroys the conflicting polarities of duality and non-duality by fusing them in the unity of the oneness she engenders. Thus the triad in its two aspects forms the Triangle 'the Wheel of the Three Energies filled with the fifty Liṅgas of the energies of the letters (cf. 7/15cd-16ab).

23. Cf. 58/68cd.

28. These lines conclude this presentation by relating the Triangle to the Hexagram. The three energies of will – Śāmbhava, knowledge – Śākta and action – Āaṇava are located in the three corners of the Yoni in the centre of which is the Point which is the Liṅga, here called the Solitary Tree. Together these form Kula which is both the Ocean of the Yoni and the Island of Moon within the Hexagram.

29. Kaulinī is Rudraśakti. She is Vāgbhava, the syllable AIṀ. This, the Kaula Praṇava, like its Upaniṣadic equivalent, OṀ, possesses three and a half measures. See note to 2/41 and 6/210. Below (60/97) the Half Measure is the supreme energy that forms itself into three parts. These are the three measures of Meru – the letter E. They are the 'three divisions' of Rudra's energy. Its 'original' unitary form is the Half Measure contained in Ṁ.

30. Diagram 11. Vāgbhava, Rudraśakti and Meru

31. This verse suggests a didactic etymology of the name 'vāgbhava-' – 'the essence of Speech'. The Wheel of the Mothers is the aggregate of the energies of the letters that constitute Speech. The 'essence of Speech' is Śiva, the Auspicious One who is all things and contemplates Speech, his energy, in all its aspects. This 'essence' is the 'juice' – rasa – of the aesthetic delight that arises instantaneously by virtue of the contemplation Vāgbhava experiences of its own universal nature as Speech.

32. These 'whirls' are aspects of the energy held within Bhairava (see 59/21cd-22ab and note).

33. See note to 5/76cd-77ab.

34. YKh (1) '((This) creative outpouring (udbhava) is Kaula Yoga,) the Liṅga, vital breath and the deity (liṅgaṁ prāṇaṁ ca devatā)'. This may well be the original reading of the source and makes good sense. However, the altered reading in the KuKh is probably intentional and so has been retained.

35. This passage (32-39ab) is primarily concerned with the Centre of the Triangle of Vāgbhava the 'supreme syllable', which is the 'Hermitage of No-mind', that is, the abode of the Transmental that contains all the energies. The triangular base is the Yoni that is within the End of the Twelve at the summit of immanence and so is the elevated Ocean of the 'lofty lotus' that faces downwards. The Centre is the calyx and womb of the Lotus, the 'heart of emission' – the core reality from which creation proceeds. It is represented by a 'ball', that is, the Point (bindu) which serves as the fire pit in which burns Saṁvartā, the Doomsday Fire that consumes even as its sustains with its vivifying warmth and generates the universe with its divine creative energy. Shifting to a third metaphor, the Centre is the Great Void of the New Moon 'adorned with the sixteen vowels' of the energies of the Full Moon.

Again, from a fourth perspective the Point in the Centre is the Liṅga. It is Śiva, that is, Bhairava who is the goddess's consort. The Point 'looks like a conch shell with three whirls' because it contains the aggregate (59/21cd) of the three energies of will, knowledge and action within Kuṇḍalinī, 'the mistress of the calyx', Saṁvartā, the Great Void which is the bliss (bhagāhlāda) and the outpouring (bhagodbhava) of the emanation of the Yoni that, as it were, encompasses it. The outpouring of bliss through which the universe is created takes place by the Kaula union of the polarities of the goddess, who is the energy of the Void in the Point and its 'body' which is Bhairava. The Point is Udyāna Liṅga, the same Liṅga in which the goddess hids herself on the Island of the Moon according to the myth of her origin recorded in the KMT (see intro. vol. 1, p. 32).

36. The 'Mother aspect' is, I suppose, the Great Void, the energy of the Liṅga (= Bindu) from which it arises spontaneously. Its 'sixteen divisions' are the energies of the vowels that 'adorn' the Void, that is, the triangular body of Vāgbhava (see diagram 25 in note 32 of chapter 62). The Liṅga is 'outside' the Triangle of AIṀ and also 'within its own body', that is, in the centre of the Triangle. They are essentially the same Point. If we visualize the syllable in three dimensions as represented in the following diagram we can see clearly how this is so.

The outer Drop emanates its energy generating the series below it beginning with its own body, the Moon, then the Sun and the body of the Triangle / Pyramid. There, in the centre, it casts the 'shade' (cf. 57/43cd-44ab) of its energies and appears there in its original form (bimba), not as a reflection (pratibimba) or illusory replication.

37. Diagram 12. The Inner and Outer Drop of Vāgbhava

38. Just as the object of desire exists as a potential within the desire everything that is to be generated from the transcendental Emptiness is contained in its Will, represented by the Point. Vāgbhava is itself 'everything of all things' (58/31) held within it in a potential state. It is 'the group of six', namely, the three energies of the sides of the Triangle and the three energies above, that is, the slanted line (tiryagrekhā), the Half Moon and the Point, governed by the two triads of goddesses (see above note 19, diagram 8). In the centre is the Point that represents the plane from which issues the Krama. This is Bhairava who governs the Mothers who are the sixteen energies of the lunar vowels. Within Bhairava, the Point whose form is the Will, is his supreme energy – Parā – who contains in a potential form the sixfold potency of Vāgbhava and so is herself sixfold – Ṣoḍhā (cf above 22/2). As she has not yet emitted her contents, sixfold Parā, remains one as the pure energy of the Will uncontaminated by any object of desire, however subtle or elevated.

39. Mudrā is the goddess. Her 'peak' syllable (kūṭa) or aggregate (kūṭa) of energies are gathered together in her essential transcendental Voidness, which is the Supreme Abode of all that exists in any form, resonant with the Unstruck

Sound of Vāgbhava.

40. Diagram 13. The Mudrākūṭa

41. The Field is the expanse of the Void represented by Vāgbhava symbolized by its triangular body lined and filled with the letters (7/12). The right corner of Vāgbhava is the location of the upward developments of the 'half measure' which is crowned with the Point, the Lord of the Field here called the Lord of the Void. His body is the Moon with its sixteen energies, below which is the Sun, represented by the Half Moon. From here, as from the centre, the energies of the polarities unfold within the Void of their essential nature.

42. The Liṅga of the Field is the Point in the centre that generates its energy and is worshipped by means of the form of the goddess's Samaya Vidyā encapsulated by the Five Praṇavas called Mahantārikā (7/35cd-36ab). This is the Vidyā of the Full Moon in the middle of the Triangle (7/47-49ab).

43. This and the following are thirteen names for the Centre (externally male) and its energy (internally female).

44. The Centre is called 'conjuction' because it unites the two triangles of the hexagram that surround the triangle.

45. We have seen that the Five Praṇavas in the forward order are added to the beginning of Kubjikā's thirty-two syllable Samayā Vidyā and at the end, in reverse (9/59). Thus Vāgbhava, which is the first of the Five Pranavas, is at the beginning and end of the 'goddess's Transmission', that is, the Samayā Vidyā.

46. After examining the Centre, the text moves back again to the whole of Vāgbhava which in the following passage (up to 54) it is represented as the Liṅga of Space in six forms (mūrti) each of which is a Liṅga of Space in its own right containing its own deity. Located in Vāgbhava, they represent aspects of its transcendental Emptiness symbolically distributed spatially as indicated in the following table.

6. Table of the Contents of the Sixfold Liṅga of Space

Pīṭha	Location	Liṅga	Deity
Vajra			Mātṛmudrā
Space	Centre		Yoginīhṛdaya
Jālandhara	South	Tejoliṅga	Mūrtideva
Kāmarūpa	In front	Kāmaliṅga	Kāmeśvara
Koṅkaṇa	Centre and Circle of the Drop	Koṅkaṇaliṅga	Kīrtideva

The Thunderbolt is yet another name for the triangular body of Vāgbhava. It 'arises and falls away' emitted and withdrawn from the Point in the centre. The Goddess – Mudrā – who presides over the Mothers, that is, the energies of the letters, and its extension above the triangular body of Vāgbhava resides there. Together they are the Heart of the Yoginī, that is, Vāgbhava. It is in the Point in the centre of the Triangle – the sacred seat of Space (ākāśapīṭha).

This is the first of the six Liṅgas of Space.

47. The three Liṅgas / seats form the corners of the triangular body of Vāgbhava marked, as usual, by the energies of the three syllables in the corners. They are generated 'by churning both the Sun and Moon', that is, by contemplating separately and together the polarities represented by the movement of the two breaths.

48. This is the way Udyāṇa Liṅga is described above (58/36cd-37ab). We may safely assume that in this presentation Koṅkaṇa Liṅga has replaced it in the centre. It is 'just born' (jātamātra) because it is the pure Will that is the first emergence of immanence. We may perhaps also hazard to suggest that it is also 'just born' because it is a new addition to the Kubjikā tradition.

In the centre it 'arises' from the 'triple nature' of the energies in the corners of the Yoni contained there in the Liṅgas. As usual, the Point that is 'above' is the Point that is 'within'. Thus 'above that' Triangle (just as within it) is the upper Circle of the Point through which flows the energy of bliss which is 'pure repose' in Koṅkaṇa, that is, within the goddess's Yoni.

49. The ‘mind’ is the energy of the Void. It is the Liṅga that if filled with the bliss of generation (udbhava) (58/11).

50. We have seen that the Mahantārikā Vidyā is the mantra of the Liṅga of the Field (58/41cd-43ab). The Field (i.e. the Triangle) in this presentation is Koṅkaṇa and the Koṅkaṇa Liṅga in the centre is the Liṅga of the Field and so we may assume that the the Mahantārikā Vidyā is the mantra meant here.

51. According to YKh (1) this sentence reads: The body of Kubjīśa and Kubjikā is in one place in the middle of both. (ubhayaikatra (g: ubhayaukatra) madhyasthā kubjīśakubjikātanuḥ (k, ṅ: -kubjikāṁtanuṁ; g: kubjikātanuṁ; gh: -tanuṁ))

52. Cf. above 58/9cd-11ab. The letter A is in the bottom corner of the downward facing Triangle of letters. The Triangle is formed progressively as the letters emerge, as it were, one after another by what is conceived to be a process of division or the formation of modalities of the letter A. When they all emerge the Triangle is fully formed. This is the body of the Supreme Letter, that is E, which is shaped in this way. From that the mantras arise. The first series of mantras are the Five Kulas, that is the Five Praṇavas, beginning with Vāgbhava.

53. The threefold sound of Vāgbhava are the seed-syllables in the corners of the Triangles.

54. I suppose the text refers here to the syllable KHPHREṀ. Above the ‘Kha’ of this syllable is the same slanted line, Half Moon and Drop that ‘decorates’ Vāgbhava.

55. Cf. above where Vāgbhava is called the Heart of the Yoginī (58/44cd-45ab).

56. From the point of view of the six parts or aspects of Vāgbhava, the Supreme Energy it enshrines is called Ṣoḍhā (58/38cd). Here, from the point of view of the sixteen lunar energies that emanate from it (cf. 58/33cd-34), it is called ‘Ṣoḍaśī (the Sixteenth), and is ‘sixteenfold’. We have seen that the sixteen energies are regularly equated with the Sixteen Siddhas of the goddess’s lineage in YKh (1) (see intro. vol. 2, p. 495 and cf. notes to 60/31-32ab). The sixteen lunar energies within the Point are the flow of bliss that courses through the Void.

57. The sixfold Meru Liṅga is AIṀ described above as the sixfold Liṅga of Space (58/43cd ff.).

58. The three divisions of Mātṛkā are the three series of letters that line the sides of the Triangle (see 7/13-14ab). The two Paths of Meru are probably the right and left slanting sides of the downward facing Triangle. The channel in the middle is the Point in the centre – the sacred seat of OṀ – where Kulakaulinī, the energy of Kula (i.e. the Triangle) is located. One of the names of the Point is ‘flower’ (see intro. vol. 2, 410-411) and so, presumably, the three Flowers are the Points in the corners of the Triangle. When these are ‘melted away’ they return to their original undifferentiated state as the pure energy of the Void.

59. The three seed-syllables in the corners of the Triangle are HRĪṀ, ŚRĪṀ and KLĪṀ. These are the 'three letter Īs' said below (59/5) to be the 'outpouring (udbhava) (of the Point) that is full of bliss'. In other words, they represent the first outpouring from the channel / Point in the centre of the Yoni of the goddess Ambikā / Herukā / Kubjikā.

60. Both the Siddhas are silent and so they are both called the Silent One, which is the meaning of both Maunī and Tūṣṇī. They are called Tuṣṇīśa and Sahaja below (59/47cd-48ab) and Mitranātha and Oḍḍīśanātha (see above 53/3). The two Siddhas are also the letters Ha and KṢa within the Triangle – the Cave of the Void. Guhānātha lives in the Cave of the Point between them (see above, 58/7cd-8ab).

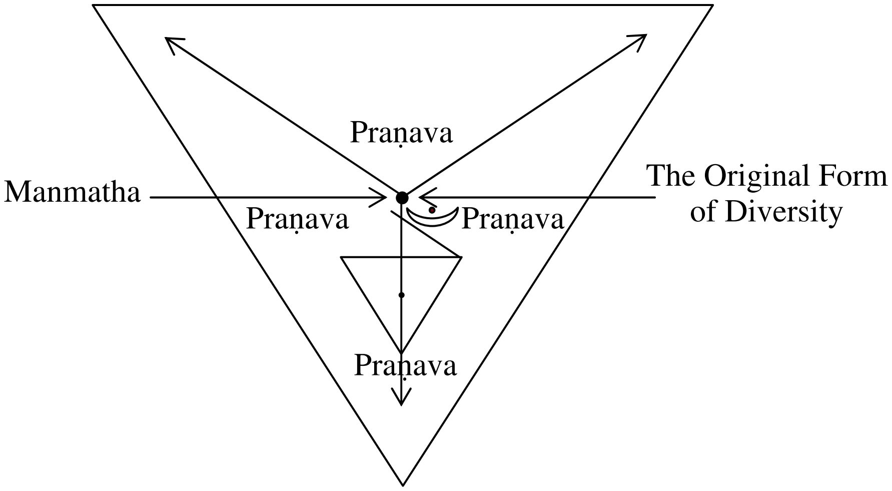
61. As the energy of the goddess rotates anti-clockwise along the 'left-ḥand path', the energies of the letters manifest progressively and are deployed one after another to form the Triangle of Vāgbhava. This is formed from Fame (the energy in the Centre), the Cave (the Void that contains it), the Liṅga (which is the Point, the body of the energy of Fame) and the Kadamba Tree (which is the complete syllable AIṀ in the centre of the Triangle).

62. Cf. 58/24cd where Aparaśabda is identified with Vāmā, who emites the universe. Here this function is said to be that of Nādaśakti who emites, whereas as Paraśabda the goddess reverts to her original condition as Parā who, as the Void – 'the Abode of the Cave' – withdraws her emanation.

63. See above, 57/86cd-87ab where Śiva is said to be the 'parasol for the shade'. The Shade of the Moon is the Point. There the goddess is in her undifferentiated (niṣkalā) state as pure spiritual energy in the expanse of the Void of pure consciousness. It is symbolized by the dimensionless point in the centre of the maṇḍala that emerges from it as the body of the goddess. This is the Triangle, the City of the Moon, which is the abode of the Full Moon – the Point in the centre – even as it is the House of the tradition in the End of the Twelve.

64. Descending from the End of the Sixteen to the End of the Twelve the original Point, which is the 'pure', that is, undivided and indivisibly one, Point becomes the 'original form of (as yet unmanifest) diversity (bhedabimba)' of which the ensuing diversity is the manifest 'reflection' (pratibimba). For this to take place it splits three ways to form the triangular Yoni which is the deity of Kula and the source – yoni – of emanation. Thus:

Diagram 14. The Splitting of the Point



The form of this Point is passionate desire (kāmarūpaka) (58/38cd-39ab) represented by Manmatha, the god of love. His 'splitting apart' and 'rubbing' is the inner dynamism that generates the blissful outpouring (udbhava) of the Yoni. In this way the 'calyx of Meru arises'. Above this is the Primordial Seat (ādyapīṭha) 'adorned with the Five Praṇavas' (58/4-5ab). Presumably, Vāgbhava, the first Praṇava is in the centre and the remaining four surround it in the four directions, as depicated in the diagram.

65. YKh (1) (28/76ab) reads: The Transmental abides in the five locations by the activity (gati) of the vital breath.

unmanī [k: anmabhī; g: unmaṇī; gh: janmabhī; ṅ: janmatī] prāṇagatyā [k, gh: -gaṁ] ca [k, gh: missing; ṅ: gaṁ] pañcasthāneṣu [ṅ: parasthāneṣu] tiṣṭhati [g: viṣṭhati] |

These five locations are the Praṇavas that, representing the Five Elements, are the five offerings by means of which this, the supreme rite of adoration takes place.

66. These are the aspects of reality on the 'supreme plane' represented by Vāgbhava pervaded by the Supreme Brahman. The base is the Stone above which is the 'progressive arising of energies' through the slanted line ranging through the Half Moon above into the Point, here called Brahmā's Stone of Birth.

67. The MSs of YKh (1) read ajākhyā and kujākhyā instead of ṛjviṇī.

68. The ‘straight one’ is the straightened active form of Kuṇḍalinī. Her energy is that of the New Moon present in the ‘lustration’ of the lunar nectar that drips down into the lower planes.

69. See above, 5/76cd-7ab and note.

70. YKh (1) (28/80ab): By churning the mind (manas) at one with the supreme intellect (buddhi) together in one place.
*mano.abhinnaparābuddhir [k, gh, ṅ: -bhinnaṁ] ekatra mathanādi [g: mathā * dapi; ṅ: mathavād] api* |

71. Previously the text explained that the ‘mind’ (manas) is the Liṅga of Space in the centre (58/11cd-12ab) and that the substance of the mind (citta) is the energy of the Void, the Liṅga which is the bliss of generation (udbhava) (58/11) and so are essentially two names for the same reality. However, ‘mind’ in this context is not the supreme energy rather it is the individual mind centred on the Point. The goddess is perceived by means of the energies of Vāgbhava (= Fame) when the individual mind is fused with ‘supreme intellect’ (parābuddhi) or, we may also understand this expression to mean ‘the intellect of the supreme energy / goddess’. This takes place by the dynamism of that same energy within the Point that ‘churns’ them and mixes them together within the one pure energy of consciousness through which the transcendental Voidness, which is the essential nature of the goddess, is experienced directly. This is just as she experiences it herself through her ‘intellect’ here also called ‘Fame’, which is the energy in the Centre (58/43ab). This takes place in the End of the Twelve when the ‘bolt of the Door of Brahmā’ – the cavity at the top of the head – has been opened and the ‘mind’ of the individual soul is free to travel up beyond the body into it. There in that Place (sthāna) the liberated yogi enjoys the bliss of the Yoni (bhagāhlāda) ‘the supreme savour (of the aesthetic delight of consciousness)’, which is the essential nature of the goddess Ciñciṇī.

72. In this context the Root Sūtra is, as we have seen (58/9cd-13), Vāgbhava. The sixteen conventions / divisions are, presumably, the lunar energies of the vowels that radiate from the Void of Vāgbhava and constitute the ‘lineage’ that arises out of it. These sixteen, along with the god, who is the Point and the goddess who is the energy within it make up the eighteen phases or aspects of the Divine Current of the Transmental. The Sixteen are the aggregate – Kula – of the energies and the two, god and goddess, Akula, who possesses and governs it. When the sixteen are ‘mixed together’ they work in harmony and are experienced as the blissful outpouring of the Yoni and the Point.

73. The term ‘piṇḍa’ commonly denotes the body or aggregate of letters as in the expression ‘kulapiṇḍa’. Presumably then, the ‘sevenfold body’ is the Yoni as the Meruprastāra with its seven rows of letters (see 8/24-25ab). The Void of Darkness is the Primordial Seat (58/4) in the centre of the Yoni. Earth is the element governed by Vāgbhava, just as the remaining four elements are governed by the other four Praṇavas. Thus these lines teach that the yogi should contemplate the Yoni with Vāgbhava in the centre of it in the End of the Twelve from which emerges the energy which is the goddess in the form of a beautiful woman.

74. YKh (1) (28/85cd): Having drunk it, the unstable body becomes a part of the Transmission and is purified.
pītvā ca asthiraṁ piṇḍaṁ kramabhāgī [k, gh, ṅ: -bhāgā] viśuddhyati ||

75. Cf. 58/95cd-96ab.

76. YKh (1) (28/87ab): (AIṀ) the seed-syllable that is the Space of the Self (ātmākāśa) is the supreme space of the Supreme Self.
ātmākāśaṁ tu yad bījaṁ parākāśaṁ [k, gh, ṅ: nirā-] parātmanaḥ |

77. Below (58/89cd-90ab) we are told that the Supreme Plane arises and so is experienced directly by the 'merger', that is, gathering together of the energies.

78. YKh (1) adds the following that helps to explain why this takes place 'in front of the abode of the Yoni':

Something (indescribable) arises there in front of the abode of the Yoni, which is the glorious power and bliss of the object of enjoyment. Thus Bhairava is delighted. In this way, the arising of knowledge and pervasion takes place within the condition of the pervader (of all things). The pervader is the same as Śiva and Śakti is the deity of bliss.

tatra cotpadyate kiñcid bhagadhāmapurāgrataḥ [k, gh: -bhagāvvāma-; g: -bhagāmdhāsapurā-; ṅ: bhagāmvāsapurā-] ||
vibhavaṁ bhogyam ānandaṁ [g: yogyamā-] tato 'hlādito [k, gh, ṅ: mano.ahlādita; g: -ta] bhairavaḥ [k, gh, ṅ: bhairava; g: bhairavaṁ] |
evaṁ [g: eva] jñānodayo [k, gh, ṅ: -yā] vyāptir vyāpakatve [g: vyāpti-] pravartate ||
*vyāpakaḥ śivasāmānyaḥ [k, gh: śivā * mānaṁ; g: śivamāna; ṅ: śivamānaṁ ] śaktir ānandadevatā | YKh (1) 28/88cd-90ab.

On one level the text is outlining the process of the union of Śiva and Śakti. On another, parallel level, one may hazard to suggest that the Tantra is describing what takes place in the union between the accomplished yogi, identified with Bhairava, and his partner, identified with the goddess.

79. See above, note to 5/76cd-77ab.

80. The members of these six groups together make fifty. Presumably, they correspond to the letters of the alphabet. The division into six groups suggests that that may be arranged in some way in the Hexagram around the Triangle. The first four groups add up to seventeen, which may be the energies of the Moon along with extra energy of the New Moon. The fifth group is the number of units of the Krama and the last the number of its groups (cf. 58/96cd-97ab). But it is not clear to me what this arrangement represents exactly. At any rate, the sense is that when the fifity energies of the letters in the triangular field of the Yoni and their equivalents in the surrounding Hexagram merge into the transcendental Void, the Yoni is realised to be that Voidness and so, devoid of differentiation. is 'pure'.

YKh (1) adds here:

The Lord (bhagavat) ('who possesses the Yoni') is in the middle of the Yoni (bhaga) and is the treasure of those who are parts (of him and possess a Yoni) (bhagin). Penetrating through by the power of his Gesture, (the state of) union (yoga) arises as the state of the worshipper and the object of worship – both meditation and the meditater. (This is) the one Gesture of the tradition, that is, the Yoni, by virtue of which there is deity (devatā).

bhagināṁ bhagamadhyastho [k g: -sthāṁ] bhagavān bhagināṁ nidhiḥ |
tasya mudrāprabhāvena [-prabhedena] bhittvā yogaṁ pravartate ||
pūjyapūjakabhāvena dhyānadhāraṇakāvubhau |
anvayasya tu mudraikā bhagaḥ [k: bhagaṁ] sa [k: vā; g: saḥ] yena [k: mena] devatā || YKh (1) 28/93-94.

81. YKh (1) (28/96): There is one letter of (all) the Liṅgas (i.e. letters) (varṇam ekaṁ ca liṅgānāṁ). It is the circle of the twelfth vowel (AI) which is the plinth (adhiṣṭhāna) of mantra and of the Western House.

varṇam ekaṁ ca [gh: va] liṅgānāṁ dvādaśasvaramaṇḍalaṁ [k, gh, ṅ: dvādaśaṁvaramaṇḍalaṁ] |
adhiṣṭhānaṁ tu mantrasya paścimasya gṛhasya ca ||

The triangular part of the syllable AIṀ is the 'plinth' or support of the body of AIṀ, which is full of letters generated from A (58/56cd-57ab), and so is the foundation and source of every mantra.

82. Cf. 58/86cd-88ab.

83. The Great Jewel is Kuṇḍalinī who is filled with the 'many jewels' of the letters. Cf. above 3/120-121, 25/10a and below 59/76cd-77.

84. Cf. above where Vāgbhava is called the Heart of the Yoginī (58/44cd-45ab) and the heart of all the gods and goddesses (58/57cd-58).

85. It is said in several places that the Triangle is is the crossroad of three paths (tripatha) along which the energy of the goddess moves. Here the text refers to a cross roads of four paths. This is the Supreme Place. Above we were told that the Place is the location where the bliss of the Yoni, identified with the goddess, is experienced (58/78cd-79ab). This is the Point in the centre of the Yoni. This is indeed where Vāgbhava is located. Or, to be more precise, this is the Point that crowns Vāgbhava. From here radiate three energies (called Mudrās) that make three of the 'paths'. Presumely, the fourth 'path' is the inner flow of energy within the Point.

86. Cf. 58/9cd-11ab and 56cd-57ab.

87. The triangular body of Vāgbhava is the 'plinth', that is, the base of the Liṅga of Space and its four divisions are the sacred seats. It is the sacred sonic essence of both the lineage and the Krama.

88. The sonic maṇḍala AIṀ is here presented as the place where the scripture and the teachings originate and are worshipped. See intro. Vo. 1, p. 377 and above note 46/1ab.

89. The teachings of the KJN are also in the house of every Yoginī in Kāmarūpa.

90. Concerning the Transmission of Twenty-seven, see note 84 to 3/54 and appendix 8 of vol. 3 of the text.

91. The Krama, which invariably consists of six groups of mantras, is probably the sixfold Kula.

92. Concerning the descent of the Śrīmata and its progressively shortened form see intro. vol. 3, p. 42 ff.. The MBT in 24,000 verses is divided into three parts (69/28cd-29ab).

93. See above, 26/2.

NOTES OF THE SANSKRIT TEXT OF CHAPTER FIFTY-NINE

1. This chapter corresponds to YKh (1) 29/9-97ab with which it has been collated. YKh (1): श्रीनाथ.
2. YKh (1) ङ्: देवे

3. YKh (1) ङ्: स्वानि The regular form of the vocative of स्वामिनी the feminine of स्वामिन् is स्वामिनि. See above note to 5/40c and 4/38c. This and the following two lines are also found in above as 8/1-2ab and 27/1-2ab.
4. YKh (1) ग्: –देसञ्ञ

33. क्, घ्, झ्: –भरिकौलीशं; all other MSs and YKh (1): कोङ्कणाभरि कौलीशं In making this emendation I assume that the final vowel of स्वामी has been shortened for the metre.

34. All MSs: विकला–; YKh (1): क्षीणकत्मया The order of the units of this compound is irregular. विकल्पकल्मषक्षीण: would be correct but entails an irregular seventh syllable.

35. ग्: मातग; all other MSs: –मातंग; YKh (1): –मातंगा

36. YKh (1): उन्मनी परमावहा

37. घ्, ज्, झ्: शिख–; छ्: –शिखदीपमहोच्छष्मा; YKh (1) –महाच्छाया. The order of the

IC. –विकासी would be correct but does not fit the metre. We commonly find that the plural replaces the singular of such agent nouns and adjectives, especially at the end of a line (see above, note to 4/3c). The form we would then expect is –विकासिन: if masculine. In this case, the form विकासिनम् is, as it were, a neuter derivative in concord with its substantive.

NOTES OF THE TRANSLATION OF CHAPTER FIFTY-NINE

1. Chapters 59 to 64 of the KuKh are taken wholesale from chapter 29 to 31 of YKh (1). They are an exposition of the Krama of YKh (1) which is the Kaumārakrama of Twenty-seven parts (KuKh 59/1-2ab) in six groups of mantras divided 4-5-6-4-5-3. These correspond to the four sacred seats (KuKh chapters 59 to 61), the Five Jewels (Ratnapañcaka) (KuKh chapter 62), the Six Yoginīs (Jñānaṣaṭka) (KuKh chapter 63), the Pure Pentad (Vimalapañcaka) and the Triad (Trikabheda) (KuKh chapter 64). These chapters present complex, and often obscure, 'esoteric explanations' (bhūmikā) of the energies of the planes of existence (bhūmikā) to which they correspond. Most of chapter 66 is YKh (1) 33 that deals with the Octad of Kula associated with this Krama. The end of YKh (1) 33, which is the conclusion of this long section, is KuKh 65/1-22.

2. YKh (1) (29/10cd) adds: That is accomplished by its esoteric meaning (bhūmikārtha). Tell me (that so that people) may attain liberation.
bhūmikārthena saṁsiddhaṁ kaivalyārthaṁ vadasva me ||

3. The teaching of Kulakaula is the maṇḍala. Here this is understood to be its basic essential core – the Triangle of which the sonic counterpart is the syllable AIṀ. Kula is the triangular body of the syllable AIṀ. This Triangle is the letter E which in the following verse is called the 'pure form' of AIṀ. It is the core of it without the additions that convert it from E to AIṀ. The three syllables HRĪṀ ŚRĪṀ KLĪṀ are on the corners of the Triangle (see intro. 1, p. 273). Thus it is called Trikūṭa – the mountain with three peaks or, occasionally, the 'letter Ī tripled' (58/63cd-64ab and 59/5). Kaula, which is derived from Kula, comprises the permutations of Kula. Internally they are the upper additions to the Triangle. Externally, Kaula is the Hexagram (39/24).

4. The term bhūmikārtha is difficult to translate because it has two meanings that relate to aspects of the teaching and the reality that is taught. From the first point of view the bhūmikārtha is the explanation of the Root Sūtra which describes in its own symbolic language the parts of the maṇḍala and its sonic contents and counterparts. In this sense 'bhūmikā' means simply 'explanation'. The term 'bhūmikā' also denotes the energy of the 'bhūmi', that is, the 'ground' of existence represented by the maṇḍala and its sonic counterparts. This energy is in a state of perpetual development or 'expansion' (vikasvarā) through the phases of manifestation. Understood to be both 'form' (rūpa) and 'sound' (nāda), the phases of its development are represented in these two parallel aspects, that is, as the parts of the maṇḍala that emerge as it being drawn and the energies or phases of sound as the corresponding mantras or syllables are uttered. Both aspects symbolize the experience of the phases of the dynamism of the one reality. This experience, ranging from transcendental Emptiness to that of concrete phenomena, is that of Deity. It is also the experience Deity has of its own nature and the reality (artha) which is the meaning (artha) of the fundamental ground (bhūmikā) of all phenomena and the transcendent. This is represented by the lunar Drop (indubindu) in the center of the maṇḍala from which emanation proceeds, just as the point in the center is the place from which the drawing of the maṇḍala begins. It is also the explanation (bhūmikā) of the maṇḍala and the Krama – the sequence of sonic energies, seed syllables and mantras that accompany it.

5. Cf. above 6/4. The beauty of the Moon is the Half Moon and the Point above the E. These are the New Moon and the Full Moon, respectively that constitute the 'moonlight of Akula' (61/5). The triangular part of the seed-syllable – that is the letter E – is the pure unmanifest form of the goddess as the Transmental (59/35). Here again we notice how the container (the Triangle) and the contained (the Drop of the energy of the Transmental) are one.

6. The Lunar Drop is anusvāra, which is a 'reduced' vocalic form of the letter 'Ma'. Graphically it is represented above the letter E and is also at the centre of the Yoni. Here the god and the goddess are in union. In the following verses he is said to be Vijñāna Bhairava, Śiva, Kaulīśa. She is Koṅkaṇā, Mātaṅgī and Mahocchuṣmā – the Flame of Kuṇḍalinī. He is consciousness (vijñāna) and she is the Transmental, the energy of consciousness which is the 'plane of the Supreme Goddess'.

7. The three seed-syllables in the corners of the Triangle are HRĪṀ, ŚRĪṀ and KLĪṀ. Thus the 'letter Ī tripled' refers to the condition of the Triangle, fully formed, filled with the energies of the letters and the seed-syllables as the outpouring (udbhava) of the Drop, which 'full of bliss', is the source – Yoni – of emanation. See above note to 58/63cd-64ab.

8. The letter Ma stands, I suppose for the Point understood as the union of Śiva and Śakti. The former is the Void that is the 'body' of the Point and the latter its energy. Śiva is represented in the maṇḍala by the Hexagram and Śakti by the Triangle it contains. Cf. 59/14.

9. A similar triad of goddesses who are said to be on the Three Peaks (of the Triangle) are mentioned above. These are Siddhā (Accomplished), Śuṣkā (Emaciated) and Mahācchāyā (Great Shade) (53/7). The following variant reading of this verse in YKh (1) (29/16cd-17ab) possibly refers to the last of these. If so, Siddhā is Koṁkaṇā and Śuṣkā is Mātaṇgī:

The Flame is the Great Shade (mahācchāyā) of the Lamp. (while) consciousness (vijñāna) is the Supreme Lord. The current of the Transmission within the Cave resides on the Path of Meru.

śikhā dīpamahācchāyā vijñānaṁ parameśvaraḥ ||
guhānte [g: guhānaṁte] kramoghaṁ tu merumārgādhivāsinam |

(Kuṇḍalinī) is commonly called 'the Flame'. Here she is the Great Shade, the energy of the Point, which is the 'Lamp'.

10. The Wick is the Vidyā (58/42). She is the energy within the Point, the 'body' of which is 'knowledge'. The Stone is the Triangle, which is the body of the syllable AIṀ. Here is the Place of the Awakened, where the Supreme Place, the Crossroad of the Point, is located (see 58/94cd-95ab and note).

11. This is the Divine Current, the Void that flows through the Point, the Divine Liṅga which is itself the Void that contains the three energies (= Gestures) that flow through it and out to form the Triangle of the Yoni. Here this sacred seat is called Koṅkaṇa. We have already noted how Koṅkaṇa replaces Udyāna Liṅga in the centre in the Circle of the Point where the 'pure repose' of the flow of the energy of bliss is experienced within the Yoni (see 58/51cd-52ab and note).

12. This line reads in YKh (1) (29/18cd): The Great Void (mahākāśa) is the Current of the Liṅga. The Divine Liṅga is eternal.
mahākāśaṁ [g: -śā] tu liṅgoghaṁ divyaliṅgaṁ tu śāśvatam |

13. 'Saṁhitārtha-' means both 'the meaning of the scripture' and the 'reality that is conjoined together'. Just as the Point contains the three energies that form the Triangle in a potential form within itself as aspects of the energy of bliss that flows through it, similarly, the unfolding of the six aspects represented by the Hexagram exist 'conjoined together' as the one reality represented by these six aspects of AIṀ. All Vidyās and mantras begin with this syllable including the seed-syllable of the god – Navātman.

The following few verses describe these six aspects of the 'reality that is conjoined together' within the Point.

14. The letter Ha is in the centre of the triangle filled with letters, which are the energies or 'rays' of consciousness. There, they are all gathered together in Akula, that is, the Point (58/14-15ab) where the letter Ha is located. There the energies fuse into one energy that is conjoined with the Point that symbolizes the male polarity. From this emerges the Triangle of the Yoni, which is the goddess with her sonic energies manifest (sasvarā), the threefold Rudraśakti who is the energy of the Command of the Ocean of the Yoni. Conjoined, and so identified, with these six (i.e. the letter Ha, Akula, Īśvarī and the threefold Rudraśakti) Bhairava, the Void of consciousness is sixfold. Thus, he contains the Hexagram projected around the Triangle in a potential state, even as he is the Hexagram who contains within his 'body' the Yoni (cf. 59/6 and 59/14).

15. Cf. the structure of the Santānabhuvana, intro. vol. 1, p. 274. In this case by 'qualities' are meant the three qualities generally attributed to Nature – Prakṛti, that is, sattva, rajas and tamas. However, in a more specific technical sense the 'qualities' of the Triangle or other parts of the maṇḍala are the component energies or aspects. See below, note 59/78cd-79.

16. Cf. above 58/15cd-16 where we are told that the flux of emanation enters its downward course by 'blocking Śiva and Śakti'. When their union, which is their oneness ('like wind and the sky'), is 'blocked' the transcendental state gives way to immanence. When they are re-united at the immanent level, the 'middle breath' (59/21cd-22ab) flows through the Void of the Point. When this union and the flow of the 'breath' is blocked it exerts, in a way, a pressure within the Point that primes or 'arouses' the creative will that flows tranquil in the Void of transcendental consciousness. Agitated, it assumes a state propense to emanation. This state of 'arousal' precipitates the differentiation of the energy of Speech into those of the letters arranged, as it were, along the sides and within the Yoni which is the source of emanation into phenomenal existence of all 'words' and the 'entities' (= meanings) they denote.

These verses describe the unfolding of the energy of the goddess into the Yoni in the form of the energies of the letters. The goddess herself is their unmanifest source and so is not herself any of the letters. As such she is Kumārikā (represented by the syllable AIṀ) merged into Kumāra (represented by Navātman HSKṢMLVRYŪṀ), her male counterpart in the centre. This is her 'concealed' i.e. unmanifest form in the centre (cf. 59/21cd-22ab). Her unconcealed forms are the three sides of the Yoni lined with the energies of the letters. The letters that line the sides of the Triangle constitute the 'threefold division of the letter'. They are governed by Ḍāmarī, Mālinī and Vāmā who are the goddesses of the three qualities of sattva, rajas and tamas. They emerge as aspects of the supreme energy of the Point, which is the Letterless (unmanifest) Mahāmāyā represented by the letter A which 'has no name' (anāmā). She is Kumārikā who, 'having concealed her form', abides as a potential within the fecund Point of the Peak syllable of Kumāra, her male counterpart, Navātman Bhairava. Thus it is called the Kaumāra Krama because the Krama emerges from here.

17. After describing the 'outer' manifest form of the goddess, the Tantra reverts to a description of her inner form which is her state of 'supreme pervasion' in which she pervades the six components of the Krama maintained in the potential state within the Point described in the next verse. Perhaps we can understand this as a set of three pairs, representing aspects of the basic polarity in a state of oneness making up 'the three coils' that is 'the aggregate within the centre of the Moon' (59/21cd). The first member of each pair is 'male', the second 'female', thus: 1) Being (bhāva) + the (Point which is the) Flower, 2) the Lord of the gods (Surīśa) + (AIṀ which is) Circle of the Earth, 3) the Lord of the Lineage (Ulīśvara) (Navātman who is) fashioned with passion + Śiva's unagitated (nistaraṅga) will.

18. Mātṛ Bhairava is Navātman, 'the supreme plane of the Transmission' (58/38cd-9ab). He is the male polarity in the middle of the 'group of six' aspects of his energy represented by Vāgbhava. This is held inwardly within the Point, here called the sacred seat of 'OṀ', which is Uḍḍiyāna 'the immortal ball (golaka)' and the 'summit (śekhara) of the Bhairava of the Mothers', that is, the Point at the top of his seed-syllable. The Point is Kula, that is, the aggregate of energies.

19. Bhairava is said to be like the three whirls of a conch (58/36ab). Here we are told that they are the three 'coils' of his energy. He is Bindu and the goddess is the energy within it. The Point contains the entire maṇḍala within itself in potential form. When it is 'churned' it splits up into its inner components that are projected around it there and are deployed in the parts of the maṇḍala. The 'three coils' develop into the Triangle, the 'group of six' into the Hexagram and the 'eightfold energy' into the Eight Mothers deployed on the petals of the lotus that surrounds it.

20. Breath, consciousness, Unstruck Sound, the Transmental, the Divine Current, mind (59/23cd) and more, are ways of denoting, from various perspectives, the dynamic reality that flows through the Void of consciousness represented by the Point in the Centre. From there it radiates out of it into the spheres of manifestation represented by the parts of the maṇḍala. In this phase it pours out into the realities in the corners of the hexagram that are the 'vessels' that contain the nectarine energy of its bliss.

21. The Krama is present within the abode of the Western Tradition, that is, the Void of pure consciousness, as an inner intention – kalpanā – which is not simply a desire that may be frustrated or requires exertion and means to attain its object. It is an infallibly creative idea of what is to take place by the expansion or unfolding (vikāsa) of this intention and idea represented by the maṇḍala that emerges spontaneously from the Point in the centre like a sprout from a seed or a blooming flower (vikāsa) from a bud.

22. The Heroes of Knowledge are the Siddhas who reside in the sacred seats and teach the knowledge of the Krama there.

23. The Self is Bhairava (called Piṅgala below), the male polarity (59/27).

24. The Root is the syllable AIṀ which is like a tree with its roots above and body below or, as in this case, a lotus that faces downwards (58/32-33ab) represented by the Triangle.

MS K reads mūlākṣa- 'the root letter' – an appropriate variant denoting AIṀ, the main syllable of the goddess.

25. The 'bhūtas' may be, equally, the gross elements and living beings.

26. The Peak is AIṀ that contains the sacred seats. It is also called the Root (see note 58/12-13ab) come from the Point which is the Tree of Kula.

27. Below we are told that Bhairava illumines within the Supreme Abode (59/63).

28. The next few verses describe the Couple who emerge from the Point that unites them at the Summit. He is Piṅgala, the Lord of the Heroes who is the Self and the Light of the universe. Piṅgala is the first of the five aspects of Bhairava, corresponding to the Earth element, which is the domain of AIṀ, the first Praṇava. His sonic form is Navātman. She is the pervasion and the Light of her partner and her sonic form is Vāgbhava. He is the Fire of the Void and she is Kuṇḍalinī, its consuming energy that reduces all things to Emptiness even as it creates the universe when aroused out of the unmanifest state into manifestation as the universe of the maṇḍala.

29. Internally, in the 'secret place' in 'the middle of the Cave', that is, the Void of the Point, she is Parā, who is one, undifferentiated and unmanifest. She sustains the Self, that is, Bhairava with her dynamic energy. Just as she governs the domain of the Triangle, he governs that of the encompassing Hexagram. When she emerges out of the Tree of the Point she is Kuṇḍalinī, differentiated into the energies of the letters and the rest that is in the 'three parts' of the triangle of the Yoni into which she develops as Aparā. As such she Mind Beyond Mind represented by the triangular letter E filled with the seven rows of letters and so is in seven parts. Thus she is the instrumental cause through which the transcendent generates all the mantras and words that establish the form of all phenomena, spiritual and material in relation to which she is all things as the triad of agency, its instrument and effect. Through these three, contained in the energies of the syllables in the corner of the Triangle, she oozes with the blissful energy of the letters even as she creates the worlds.

30. The 'bird' is HAṀSA, the inner breath of the Self. Its two wings are Ha and Sa. When these two polarities fall away, by mastering Navātman, the mantra of Aghora, duality gives way to the unity of Ṁ, the Point in the centre that is the Transmental energy of the Command of the Supreme Goddess. Thus, Bhairava merges into the Goddess and outer manifestation reverts into the transcendental energy that is its support and that of the god.

31. Note that the individual units (3-5-6-4-5-4) make twenty-eight, not twenty-seven! The four at the end should be three. The following verses describe how the six groups of mantras that make up the Krama corresponds to stages and aspects of the unfolding energy of the goddess – the Command – which is 'the expansion of the great consciousness'.

32. These are two of the names of Vāgbhava, see above, 58/41cd-43ab.

33. The Transmental energy pierces through the plane of the Void of the transcendent and emerges as the triangular Yoni. Thus the transcendental Liṅga of the Void becomes the immanent Liṅga of the Yoni. Then when the Point is 'churned', that is, its energies are aroused, Vāgbhava the seed-syllable Vidyā of the goddess, which is her complete sonic iconic form manifests.

YKh (1) (29/36ab) adds: She is called 'śakti' in the Krama, that is, within the sixfold authority.

krame sā (g: ta) śaktir ākhyātā (g: śaktim āyātā) adhikāre tu ṣaḍvidhe |

The following presumably relates to the Triad, that is, the Yoni, which thus completes the sequence of twenty-seven.

34. Here the Hexagram is equated with the Wheel of the Self-supported in the subtle body. Although it is formed by the union of male and female Triangles by the Command of Kula, that is, the goddess as the Yoni, it is the male body of Voidness that contains the female energy described in the next lines.

35. The two Siddhas live in the Tree (58/64cd-65ab), that is, in the Point that is the 'Cave dwelling of the Void' of Vāgbhava (58/65cd-67ab, 58/7cd-8ab). Represented by the letters Ha and KṢa, they are aspects of the Silent One, the god immersed in contemplation. Initially two Siddhas – the teacher and the deity – they are realised to be one by the power of the Command which is the 'knowledge of the Wick', that is, Vāgbhava (58/41cd-43ab).

36. The Sprout originates from the subtle flow of the inner vital breath that moves through the infinite expanse of the Void of the Point. It is the channel (nāḍī) through which it moves out into the Triangle between the two breaths of the emergence and retraction of the energy of the Void out into the maṇḍala and back, forming it from Emptiness and dissolving it back into it as it does so. The Door Panel is the breath. There are two door panels. The Door opens by splitting them apart. In the fettered state, the two breaths follow one another closely. They are linked together like two door panels of a closed door. By breaking through them and going beyond the Triangle, Tūṣṇī the Silent One, who is Hari (the Saviour), the manifestation of unstruck sound (anackakalanā), arises. First the One-footed, that is, the Triangle, and the Three-footed, its three energies, emerge into the universe delineated by spatial directions. There he moves on the surface of the earth, just as he did within the syllable and the Point in the core emptiness of the supreme principle. The Wheel of the Directions is the Triangle in which the vital breath moves as does the wind in the directions. See below 59/86cd-87 and note to 59/99.

37. The Krama of the Youth is the one taught here.

38. The Self is Śiva / Bhairava who is the Gander (59/61), Haṁsa – the Unstruck Sound of the inner breath. The Blue Lotus is the Triangle within which the deity resides. Its sides are the three channels, Iḍā, Piṅgalā and Suṣumṇā (see 35/86-87ab). Described here as a lotus with three stems pervaded by the energy of the letters HA Ṁ and SA and with nine channels – the nine letters of Navātman through which its energy moves. Bhairava's clothing are the parts of the maṇḍala. The maṇḍala is here understood to be the body of the god that clothes him with the network of conduits (also understood as cavities or voids) through which his energy flows. Thus, the maṇḍala represents Emptiness 'differentiated' to form conduits for the energies that flow through it resonant with the inner Sound (nāda) which is the essence of the mantras and seed-syllables that mark the aspects and phases of the activity of the energy that courses through them and, like sap (rasa), give life to the lotus of the maṇḍala. The Point in the centre contains, the entire maṇḍala, its energies, conduits and Voids in a potential form. It is pure Emptiness, which is both one transcendental Absolute and the Totality of immanence. In the ultimate sense there can be no parts, aspects or forms and hence no relationship within the Void of Absolute Being and so is 'nameless'. However, in order to explain where and how all things originate and exist (although they too are Emptiness) it is understood in terms of relations and parts. The Void is not at all a 'nothing'. Indeed, 'nothing' 'is' just that. Although not phenomenal 'being' and so, from that point of view 'nothing', the Void is a positive reality even though it cannot be said to be 'existent', or for that matter, 'non-existent'. It is nonetheless experienced. This experience is Bliss. The Void and the maṇḍala that represents it, are 'made of' bliss and are generated by it. The Void is sacred. It is deity and bliss is its potential power and dynamic energy. Bhairava is bliss. His body is bliss and his energy is the blissfulness (that is, aesthetic delight) of that bliss. Aspects of its power and phases of the activity of its energy unfold in the Void, which in these terms is related to it as the body is to the soul or the soul to its vital force or, to use the common analogy, to which these lines also refer, fire and its capacity to burn. Bhairava, the Lord of the Cave of the Void of the Point, is the Fire that consumes the universe at the end of each aeon (59/32) and its energy, the 'Flame' of Kuṇḍalinī.

The Void of the Lotus and the Voids of the conduits it 'contains' are Bhairava's body. The energy and the energies it houses are the goddess who thus resides in the 'body' of Bhairava. In this way Bhairava's body is the maṇḍala in relation to which he is the Self. In that perspective, the goddess and her aspects are Bhairava's body and its parts. Again, the Point in the centre is also Bhairava's body as are all the individual parts of the maṇḍala, be it the Triangle, Hexagram, the eight-petalled lotus or anything else beyond, just as they are all together collectively Bhairava's body of which he is the Self. Thus Bhairava is the Point, the Triangle and the rest. Analogously, the goddess who is the contents of this multiple body is always, from one point of view, just one. However, unlike her male counterpart, as she spreads out from the Point, she is differentiated (kalitā) or 'split up' (bhinnā), as it were, into her energies and, as a result so is the Body of Voidness she energizes. She remains one as pure of consciousness. Bhairava remains one as the Self of the Body of Energies. They are both equally Emptiness and one.

The analogies and metaphors in this dense account are various and diverse for the maṇḍala, its parts, its sonic form as the Body, its energy and aspects, permutations and individual energies (kalā). The former is represented, for example, by a cave, mountain (= stone), lotus, liṅga and, here, fire. The latter is represented by the flux of energy that, flowing through it and expanding out from the centre, deploys itself as its contents.

39. See 59/32 and 62.

40. The ‘three qualities’ here are probably the triads represented by the Triangle. See note to 59/78cd-79.

41. Piṅgala Bhairava is said above (59/27) to be the one who illumines.

42. The word ‘vikāra’ which literally means ‘change’, transformation’ or ‘permutation’ is a common term used to denote the allotropic permutations of Nature (*prakṛ*ti) into countless phenomenal forms and the instruments through which they are perceived. In this context, I suppose, it denotes these same realities but understood as the external transformations of consciousness and its energy – the god and the goddess – ‘outside’ the Point first into the maṇḍala, which is still within them and then further ‘down’ and ‘out’ into the realm of phenomena. This takes place by the creative emission of inner contents through the ‘utterance’ of the Sound that emerges from the splitting up of the Point and the differentiation of its inner energy.

43. The previous verse refers, it seems to the two Siddhas related to the core Triangle. Here they are called Bhārabhūti and Atithīśa. These two Bhairavas govern the letters ṛ and ṝ in the Assembly of Sounds. In this case, presumably, they are in the letters Ha and KṢa that or on the two sides of the central point. They are two teachers – ācārya. This sentence defines the activity of a teacher. He is a teacher – ācārya – because he observes ācāra, that is, right conduct. His ‘conduct’ is, a kind of ‘non-action’ immersed as he is in the one supreme reality which is free of outer activity, that is, 'nirācāra’ (see intro. vol, 1, p. 100 ff.). At the same time, however, it is supremely active. This activity is the movement of energy through the parts and sonic energies of the maṇḍala. Thus, the pair represent the one reality of which the polarities are perpertual activity (with aspects and parts) and repose (without aspects). In the forward order, that is, activity in repose, they represent transcendental oneness and are fused in the unity of the Point. In the ‘reverse order’ – repose in activity – they represent immanent totality and have emerged from the Point and are surrounded by the Triangle. The energies of the letters develop from the inside of the Triangle. They emanate their ‘outer’ counterparts who line the sides of the Triangle embedded in the Twelve Verses. At the same time the ‘outer’ Twelve Verses are contained in the inner one within the Triangle, that is, the syllable HSKHPHREṀ which, as we have seen consists of twelve planes or levels of development. This is the fundamental plane that is the energy of knowledge embodied in that ‘single syllable’ (ekākṣara) (see 9/1-19ab and notes).

44. YKh (1) (29/57c) reads: and (along) with the planes is the power of knowledge (bhūmikair jñānaśaktiś ca)

45. The eight may be the eight energies of Mālinī (59/85-86). The seven may be the seven Wheels (59/86) and the nine the nine energies of the letters of Navātman. The sixty-four are energies generated by the Mothers governed by as many Yoginīs. Adding these energies together and the ‘single syllable’ we get 85. Below (59/84) we are told that the Self consists of this many aspects.

46. Cf. 58/86cd-87ab.

47. See intro. vol. 2, p. 142 ff. for the three aspects of the goddess.

48. Bliss is the source of life and vitality. It is the drought of immortality. The aged who drink it become young.

49. The Lotus, also called the Blue Lotus, is Vāgbhava, particularly its triangular body (35/86-87ab).

50. These lines refer, it seems, to the empowering gaze – the Lion’s Gaze (siṁhāvalokana) – of the teacher and deity through which the person who is blessed to be looked at in this way receives the energy of the deity. But here it is directed inwards to the vision of the unfolding transcendental reality of the energies and Voids and other ’conventions’ that form the maṇḍala of the developing expanse of immanence. YKh (1) (33/57) declares:

> The knowledge which is the mind (citta) of the bliss of the lotus is the pure Bhairava of the Wheel of Unstruck Sound and is known by the insights of the heroes.

kamalānandacittātmāvijñānaṁ śuddhabhairavam [g: śiddha-] |
anāhatasya cakrasya jñāyate [k, g: jāyate] vīradṛṣṭibhiḥ [k: cīra-; k g: -vṛṣṭi-] ||

51. YKh (1) (29/61c) reads instead: Bliss is the imperishable power (of the deity) (akṣayaṁ śaktir ānandaṁ). It is the letter Ha tripled.

52. The ‘tradition’ at this stage is the inner flux of energy in the Void, the inner breath represented by the energy of the letter Ha which is tripled as it traces out the Yoni emitted through and within Emptiness. The same energy contains the potency to develop further into the Hexagram that contains the sixfold Krama and so is its cause. This takes place when it is aroused from its transcendental rest into the activity through which it develops into the Krama and the maṇḍala that contains it. Note that below (59/97) the ‘cause’ is said to be the letter Sa. Perhaps as inhalation, which gathers together all the energies, it is ‘one cause’. As exhalation (Ha) it differentiates into the energies of emanation again and so is another aspect of it.

53. Vaṅkāpura, also called just Vaṅka, is the fifteenth of the sixteen Siddhas (see e.g. 46/141cd-147ab). He is linked here, for some reason, in a special way with the transmission of the teachings in Candrapura, the City of the Moon in the outer world.

54. The teachings are not merely a set of instructions or metaphysical pronouncements. The teachings are mere ‘insentient’ words if they are not full of the blissful energy of the goddess and transmit it. They can only become so by being at one with the ‘Yoga of the bliss of generation’ (udbhavānanda) that takes place in the core of the reality, represented by the maṇḍala and its sonic counterpart, Vāgbhava, from which the transmission originates. This is realised between the 'two polarities' of the breath on the left and right. When they are united by means of this Yoga they form the Triangle which is 'the one channel (nāḍī) (of the vitality of consciousness)' (59/75cd-6).

55. The following passage describes the progressive formation of the maṇḍala in terms of the development of the unfolding of the energy of the Transmental, here called the Energy of Gesture, which is the Supreme Energy that courses in the Void. Initially completely at rest within itself, it is inwardly aroused by Bhairava to emanate the energies with it. Thus the Western House, that is, the Yoni is generated which is the source of emanation and the teachings. Aroused from its transcendental state, the one energy is contemplated in relation to its emanation as the pleroma of all its energies at the summit of immanence on the border of transcendence. The same energy now differentiated into aspects of the one Transmental energy flows out through the Point in the centre as the Divine Current with it eighteen aspects (bheda) rising out of the Ocean of the Yoni like a wave from the sea. See above, notes to 2/20-26 and chapter 57 concerning the Divine Current and 2/34cd-35ab concerning the Wave.

56. The previous lines described the initial phase of the process of emanation from the point of view of the transcendent – looking down, as it were. Now the same process is viewed from below. The Energy of Gesture is in the centre – the 'navel' – of the undifferentiated Yoni. At this stage it is the 'Great Jewel', that is, Kuṇḍalinī who sleeps in the navel (see 3/120-121 and note). The 'navel' in this context is Vāgbhava in the centre of the Triangle (see 58/41cd-43ab where 'navel' is listed as one of the names of Vāgbhava). It is also called the Great Jewel (see 62/30-33ab and 103-104ab). Kuṇḍalinī (the energy of Vāgbhava) is awakened by the grace of the power of contemplation, the Command, contained in the 'preceding instruments of mantra' that are, presumably, the energies of the Divine Current.

According to YKh (1) (29/80ab) (that reads 'śikha'– 'flame' for 'śilā' – 'stone') when Kuṇḍalinī is awakened her form is a flame which is 'the one channel (nāḍī), the supreme (form of) Māyā, that is, Māyā adorned with the three qualities (ekā nāḍī parā māyā māyā triguṇabhūṣitā)'. Māyā, or to be more precise Mahāmāyā, often takes over the function of Prakṛti and so possesses the well-known 'qualities' of the latter. Moreover, the 'three qualities' are also all the triads associated with the Triangle (see note to 59/78cd-79). Māyā is the Energy of Gesture in the form of a Flame or Lamp, that 'illumines' i.e. energizes the Peak syllable. It is the bliss of the Yoni (60/41-42). Energy, in other words, is bliss.

According to the KuKh, when Kuṇḍalinī awakes she assumes the form of the Triangle – the 'complete Stone', not just the Point. Thus, as the Yoni, which is the source and ultimate end of all things, she is the supreme form of Māyā.

57. Now the Triangle has been formed with the Point in the centre containing Vāgbhava, the next step is the emanation of the Krama. Initially this is contained within the Triple City, that is, the Triangle of the Peak syllable, Vāgabhava, in a potential state. The Triangle is filled with the 'seven (groups) of Mothers', that is, the seven rows of the energies of the letters. The six groups of mantras of the Krama are contained within them in a potential state. When they are differentiated from the sonic energies in the Triangle they become manifest and, distinct, they are projected into the Hexagram.

The south is the direction associated with the sacred seat of Koṅkaṇa (60/71cd-72) which is identified with all the seats. As the one Kula with six divisions, it is from the South that the teachings and emanation issue forth in this Age (60/33cd-34ab).

58. In this case the Liṅga is tacitly identified with the centre of the navel. The gastric fire is located in the Wheel of Maṇipura in the navel from which Kuṇḍalinī rises (see above, 3/120-121 and 25/10ab). Note that in one way or another the maṇḍala is each one of the Wheels. At the same time, all the Wheels are in the maṇḍala.

59. The supreme form of Kālī is Rudraśakti (60/32cd-33ab) who is born from the Point, which is Rudra's body and the Liṅga. She is the energy of AIṀ as the Fire born from the Liṅga of the Point. The energies displayed and made manifest as the forms and mantras of the maṇḍala, are contained in the original energy as its 'qualities'. Thus in the previous phase (or aspect) she is said to have three qualities which are the triads of the Triangle. Here the state that is generated from the triadic energy of AIṀ possesses the six qualities that are the potencies of all the groups of six projected and made manifest in the Hexagram. Thus the sequence of groups of qualities marks the aspects or phases of the outer evolution of the maṇḍala that are contained within the Point and governed by the one energy that 'regulates and controls' this process within the syllable AIṀ that is 'adorned' and contained in the Point even as she 'controls' and overpowers the bondage of transmigratory existence.

60. This verse describes the power-holder. 'Fame' is one of the names of Vāgbhava (58/41cd-43ab) and so 'God of Fame' is an appropriate name for the consort of the goddess. The 'one called Kaṣa' is the letter KṢa, which is the letter governed by Samvartaka Bhairava who, along with Kandarpa Bhairava, is one the male counterparts of the three aspects of the one energy. Bhairava in these three aspects resides in the Point, which is 'the abode of the peak of the Stone'.

61. The five seats are distributed in Vāgbhava which is contained within the Point and thus pervaded by the energy of the goddess who is their 'inner controller'.

62. The Point is the centre and foundation of consciousness. As such it is variously named 'mind' (manas), 'mental substance' (citta), 'consciousness of the mind' (cittacaitanya), 'intellect' (buddhi, mati), 'knowledge' (jñāna), 'essence of knowledge' (jñānasadbhāva), 'essence of consciousness' (bodhisattva) and the like. Its energy is the Transmental, which is also given a variety of names such as 'No-mind' (amanaskā), No Name (anāmā) and, here, Mind Beyond Mind. The potential form of the Triangle within the Point consists of the three 'qualities' of the one energy of the Point. These are variously understood, according to the context and the contents projected outwards that they prefigure in a potential form in the Void. The Point is Bhairava who is Fire. From that perspective his energy is Saṁvartā. Her three qualities are that 1) she is the First Born of transcendence, 2) she pervades the Void of the Point and, 3) as yet not aroused to manifestation is tranquil, resting within the infinite transcendence.

63. The Point, here called the Circle of the Moon, contains the 'group of four of the Command'. These are the four sacred seats, which are the vessels of the contents or aspects of the Command. In this case they contain the aforementioned three qualities with Mind Beyond Mind in the centre. When reckoned to be five, the seats are understood here to be five aspects of the Void. As modalities of the one pervasive reality (60/22, and note to 60/3), each is the Void in its own right. Thus they reflect within the Point the Five Voids that are the core of the Wheels (cakra) in the subtle body (see above 55/1-4ab). These 'contain' the groups of five, most commonly, the Five Praṇavas corresponding to the Five Elements.

64. See note to 59/67ab.

65. See above, note to 59/82.

66. The Point, as we have seen, is the Self identified with Bhairava. These verses describe how he and his power are also the individual Self. Even when all their energies has been displayed and deployed to form the complete maṇḍala the Self abides in the Centre unchanged. What alters are the energies around it – their number, configuration and function. But these too, collectively, are the same energy, the radiant power of that essential consciousness. Radiating through and as them they activate the universe and the senses, mind, speech and body of the microcosm. These function through the eight energies of consciousness. Reversing the outer flow of energy out through the physical body and senses back into the 'essence of consciousness' in the centre, it returns into the Point, the Supreme Body of the deity. Thus the yogi attains the supreme state which is the essence of the consciousness of every individual Self.

67. The goddess emerges out of the body of the god like a sprout from a seed (35/78cd-79). Thus she is 'bent over' Kuṇḍalinī who has just emerged from her infinite transcendental source and is ready to straighten and become active.

68. The seven sections of the Triangle are filled with the letters. See 8/19-20 and note.

69. After describing how entry into the Point and the dawning of the supreme state of consciousness takes place in this way, the Tantra goes on to teach what happens when the realised state of consciousness emerges out of it in another way. Now it is the radiance of the Self that illumines the activity of its energies acting in the macro- and microcosm, This is the flow of the pure energy of Unstruck Sound that emerges from the Point, as the inner breath that travels within it through the main vital channel (nāḍī) in the subtle body. Emerging between the oscillations of the flux of vital energy that gives life to the psycho-physical complex, it moves out of the Triangle into transcendence. There Hari, that is, Śiva, the unconditioned Self, 'relishes' the bliss of transcendence and then returns to enjoy the play of Kula and Kaula. Kula is the energies within the Point and Kaula Śiva and Śakti that contain them. First there is entry into transcendence perceived by the inner Self. Then there is exit from the Point and its differentiation by repeated and intense contemplation of the union of Śiva and Śakti – what the text refers to as 'churning', that splits the Point up into the parts of the Krama. This is the practice of the Krama (kramācāra), that is, the movement of awareness (vicāra) within the Krama. Vāmā is the aspect of that movement that generates emanation (= the 'splitting and melting of the Point') and Jyeṣṭhā the one that impels the return to the original inner state. See above, 26/13cd-21

70. The Wheel, that is, the aggregate of energies – Kula – in the Point is 'churned' by contemplation (dhyāna), otherwise called 'passionate recollection' (smaraṇa) (26/20) or the movement of awareness or reflection (vicāra) that participates in the experience of the union of Śiva and Śakti. Elsewhere we are told that 'by churning the Wheel, the possession of Yoga (yogāveśa) takes place again and again' (26/18cd). This possession (āveśa) is 'the arising of the bliss of consciousness' which is one's own nature. (26/17-18ab) This is yogic sleep (yoganidrā) which is defined as 'consciousness in which Māyā has been destroyed' (13/67).

The contemplation or 'movement of awareness' generates the Triangle of the body of Vāgbhava. When that awareness is projected by the 'process of emission' into the transcendent, the Triangle of energies dissolves into the Void of the Point. This is the Liṅga which is 'seedless'. This is the state of oneness attained through the movement of the inner inhaled breath denoted by the letter Sa. The exhaled breath, represented by the letter Ha that awakens the energies completes the dynamism of HAṀSA, the Self.

71. See above note to 5/35-36. The Scalpel of Knowledge is the seed-syllable in the centre of the maṇḍala that contains its energy – the Transmental energy of the Command – differentiated in its parts. Here this is called Māyā, that is, Mahāmāyā (concerning which see chapter thirteen). She is also called Raudrī, that is, Rudraśakti who, sixfold, contains within herself in a potential form the six parts of the Krama and all the other realities, such as the Six Wheels, arranged in groups of six.

72. The anti-clockwise direction is that of ascent. The energy of Mahāmāyā can act in two ways. It can either bind or liberate. These two contrary effects coincide with the direction of its motion. When it turns in an anti-clockwise direction, it is blissful and generates the bliss of the liberated condition. When it turns in the opposite direction, it operates as the Māyā that binds, generating the Poison (viṣa) which is the pervasive (viṣa) condition of bondage (see above, note to 13/76cd-77ab). Inwardly, Raudrī moves through the Triangle in an anti-clockwise direction. This movement is reflected externally by the movement of the same energy as Kuṇḍalinī, through the Six Wheels. These collectively are the Hexagram. Thus 'the beautiful motion of the Wheel of the Directions' through which the winds of the vital breath move (66/19) is the anti-clockwise rotation in relation to the pervasive presence of the energy that courses through the Hexagram. The male polarity is the axis of the maṇḍala in the centre of its rotating parts. It represents the transcendental polarity. Fixed and supremely stable, it is the aspect of the one reality that persists free of change and differentiation. In the following verse it is called 'Mālinī's Gander' (māliniko haṁsaḥ). Haṁsa is Bhairava understood to be the pneumatic Self. He is the inner 'breathing' of pure consciousness. Represented by the Point, he is the Lord of the energy of the Transmental. In other words, he is the master of the energy of consciousness that, from its aspect as vital force, is Kuṇḍalinī who moves through the inner vital centres and gives life to the psychophysical organism. As the Transmental, it renders it sentient. In the highest sense it is the supreme energy which is 'the power of awakened consciousness' that 'awakens' consciousness in the fettered soul who, due to the impurity of his ignorant ('unconscious') actions, is conditioned and limited and so 'sleeps', immersed in thought constructs, dreaming the dream of fettered existence. So in order to understand the activity of this energy, and hence its nature, fully, the Tantra turns to the subtle body, the outer counterpart of the Hexagram in the End of the Twelve.

73. The piercing of the Wheels brings about the maturation of Karma which is thus consumed. This is what takes place in the course of initiation. Practice is the repetition of this process. The ascent reverses the processes of emanation and differentiation that takes place in the course of descent. At the apex of its rise the energies of the One are withdrawn and undifferentiated in the unity of the transcendent emptiness and so the Lord of the Transmental is 'devoid of parts'. The breath that rises and falls and the Sound (nāda) that permeates and sustains it, is stilled and the 'body', with its Six Wheels, abides 'like someone silent'. Thus the fettered soul is progressively freed of the impurity of the 'noise' of the thought constructs generated by his past actions as the energy of 'awakened consciousness' pierces through the Wheels rises up through them along with it. Divested of all the lower energies that differentiate and condition it, the individual soul resumes or, one could equally say, discovers its essential nature to be Bhairava, the universal Self at the climax of its ascent in the End of the Twelve. Here the soul is the 'silent one', Maunīśa the First Teacher immersed in meditation in the Cave of the Void of the Point, the Tree of Silence. He is Bhairava, the Void, immersed in the Void, sustained by his energy, the Goddess. The bliss experienced in that state liberates completely and finally from all forms of bondage (59/104).

74. The eighth is the final and 'great re-birth' in which one attains liberation. See above, 12/20cd-21ab n. 8.

75. YKh (1) (29/87): The instrument of that (bliss) abides established in action (karman). Established in the Root (kanda), it is Fire. Established in power (Karma) is melted (drāvita) away and so is the cause of the instrument (of liberation).

tasyaiva karaṇaṁ [g: -ṇan] tiṣṭhet kandasaṁstho [g: -sthaṁ] hutāśanaḥ ||
*śaktisthaṁ [-sthā] drāvitaṁ yasmāt [g: yasmā ] tasmāt kāraṇakaraṇam [-ṇaḥ] |

76. In the course of the rise of the energy of consciousness through the Wheels and its movement through the maṇḍala at the summit of its ascent, the Lord of the Transmental is differentiated (sakala). The undifferentiated Self – Haṁsa – is divided into the Ha of the ascending breath and Sa of the descending. In the fettered state the two operate together to contribute to the condition of bondage. Conversely, in the course of the process of liberation, they function together to contribute towards that. These verses explain how.

The instrumental cause of the bliss experienced in the Point in the centre of the Triangle in the End of the Twelve and in all the Points in the centre of each Wheel along the ascent of of Kuṇḍalinī, is the first part of Haṁsa. This is the letter Ha that represents the ascending breath of apāna in the body. This is 'established in the action' of the physical and subtle body. However, this activity – Karma – is not binding as, Karma would otherwise be, because it is 'on the seat of the energy' of Kuṇḍalinī, the Transmental. The variant reading of YKh (1) supplies a description of this energy saying that: 'established in the Root (kanda), it is Fire'. The Fire of Ha rises from the Root Wheel up through the others, burning up impurity as it does so. Thus, 'established in power', Karma 'is melted (drāvita) away' and consumed. Thus this action – Karma – is the means – 'instrument' – through which Karma is destroyed. The following verse describes the 'cause' of this process of purification that operates by means of this instrument. In general terms it is the energy of the goddess. Specifically it is the other half of Haṁsa, represented by the letter Sa. In the fettered state this marks the second half of the breathing cycle that sustains it. But once the binding impurity of Karma has been burnt away, instead of traveling through the body, it is 'concealed within the letter E'. It remains within the triangular Yoni in the End of the Twelve and it flows through it along the Path of Meru, that is, progressively through the series of sonic energies contained within it up into the Point in the centre. This energy and its activity within the Yoni and the Point is 'the cause of the instrument (of liberation)'. As the 'letter Sa' of Haṁsa, it impels Ha and is its source as it moves through the Wheels in the body and, more internally, the Hexagram.

77. Within the breath of Ha and Sa travels the energy of the 'instrument of mantra', that is, the energy of Vāgbhava, which, between them, sustains them. Here, as elsewhere, this is called the Lion. The female Lion is the goddess in her sonic form, both as Vāgbhava, her seed-syllable, and as her Vidyā. Analogously, the male Lion is Navātman and the mantra of Aghora. Here as the first Praṇava governed by Brahmā, it is said to be creative like Brahmā. Intent, on the one hand, on the Supreme, that is, the undivided unity of transcendence represented by the Point, on the other, it is the Will that contains collectively all the energies of Kula, the sphere of immanence represented by the Triangle. This is so by virtue of 'the power of the Fire and Moon (soma)'. From Vedic times Fire and Moon represent the polarities operating throughout the universe of which it is essentially composed (agnisomātmakaṁ jagat), through which it is created, sustained and destroyed. Here the Fire is Bhairava and the Moon is the Goddess.

78. The experience of the Divine Will and its emission coincides with that of the liberated state. Liberation is attained at the apex of the ascent. The Self, here symbolized by the lunar Point rises up from the lowest worlds up to the highest, here said to be that of Brahmā and from there ascends into the transcendental Emptiness. From there it emanates the worlds in the flux of its omnipotent Will that issues from the union of the Moon – the Point of Emptiness immersed in the Void of transcendence and Fire – the Self that it 'contains' and is 'contained' by it. This flux is the Divine Current of the Transmental of which its eighteen aspects or phases are as many aspects of the experience of the liberated state.

79. As the lunar Point travels upwards, the digits of its lunar energies are progressively digested into Emptiness until at the summit of its ascent it enters the Void. This is represented by the progressive rise of energy through the body of Vāgbhava up beyond into the Point at the top of it and then beyond, carrying, as it were, the lunar Point with it. The reverse marks the emergence of the Moon of the Point from the Void, now as the Full Moon repleate with all its energies primed for emission.

80. These goddesses embody the six signs of attainment corresponding to the six planes of the maṇḍala.

81. YKh (1) (29/94cd) reads this line: The eight Kulas are the knowledge of Kula endowed with the joy of the bliss of knowledge (jñānānandamudānvita).'

The eight Kulas are those of the eight Mothers who surround the Hexagram. They govern the energies of the eight categories of letters and so reproduce the energies contained within the central Triangle. Thus they contain the ‘knowledge of Kula’ – ‘the beautiful ocean’ of the Yoni full of the energies of the letters that embody the aspects of the pure consciousness of Bhairava, who the transcendental Void beyond Speech and its energies abides in the midst of them. The energies are aspects of the ‘joy of bliss’ through which Bhairava is realised to be the silent transcendental, liberated Self.

82. Each phase, plane, state, aspect, energy and groups of them, in short every part of the maṇḍala is a plane of realisation, which when fully experienced is realised to be the whole reality, the fully liberated state. This is achieved by the grace of the deity who imparts the Command of Realisation that bestows empowerment and authority (adhikāra) (see intro. vol. 1, p. 210 ff.).

NOTES OF THE TRANSLATION OF CHAPTER SIXTY

1. This chapter is drawn from YKh (1) (30/1-99 = KuKh 60/1-92) and YKh (2) (32/32-57 = KuKh 60/75-100).

2. This and the following chapter reply to this question. It appears at first sight that very little is said about the Siddhas. But this is not so. The main concern is with the inner representations of the six sacred seats and the Wheels, energies, Sound and the other inner realities related to them. These are important because they house the beings who govern the forces and processes they contain. These are the Siddhas and the Goddesses. As we travers one center to the next we encounter the Siddhas and their energies one by one and so pass from one aspect to the other of the inner experience of the Krama. These are sacred seats of the lineage (anvaya) (61/46). This then is the awareness (vicāra) of the Siddhakrama (61/37cd-38), the Current of the Siddhas that flows through the phases of emanation that correspond to the stages and aspects of this contemplation.

3. The instruments (YKh (1) reads 'causes') of realisation are the energies configured in the centers within the body of the deity. These are the 'rays'. Internally, they are the building blocks of the experience deity has within itself in which the Yogi participates as he comes to know and experience them. Externally, they operate analogously in the construction of outer experience. They are represented by the Five Praṇavas. Collectively these 'rays of knowledge' are the Great Knowledge of pure consciousness. The Tortoise in the Navel is the Point in the centre of the Triangle. All outer forms and energies merge into the Void in the Centre and the world order with all its levels, worlds and principles fuse into a single Principle and are withdrawn into the Void like the tortoise withdraws its limbs into its shell. Knowledge of how this is done, by means of profound contemplation, is the Great Knowledge. According to another possible translation: 'It is the consciousness (vijñāna) of the Supreme Lord (experienced) when the energies of the Tortoise in the Navel have been consumed.'

4. Pārameśvara is both one of the names of the MBT (see, for example, above 39/80ab) and the Kubjikā school as a whole (see, for example, above 30/73cd, 117ab and 39/150). I suppose the latter sense is meant here. See above note to 46/263-264 and cf. the expression vijñānaṁ pārameśvaram below in 64/97ab.

5. Concerning the tortoise seat, see 48/20-21ab, 55/7 and, especially, the note to 57/87cd-88.

6. Diagram 15. Kula and Kaula

7. The subject of this chapter is the Great Knowledge in both its aspects. It is the realisation of the consciousness of the transcendental unity of the male polarity and the unity-in-diversity of the energy of the female polarity – the Lord and the energy of the Lord. The former is achieved by the withdrawal of the energies into the one energy and its merger into the transcendental polarity and the latter by its emanation. The two processes somehow take place together simultaneously without contradiction. The relationship between them, like transcendence and immanence, is ultimately beyond conception. Even so, their unity is expressed through the sacred geometries of the maṇḍala and its components. Their worship and contemplation there reproduces at the level accessible to conception and application, what is taking place and exists in an ultimate sense in the sphere Beyond Mind. In order to achieve the most 'accurate' possible representation of this reality, a basic presupposition is taken for granted. This is the identity of the container and the contained, we have already had occasion to discuss (see intro. vol. 1, p. 277 ff.). This is applied in this chapter, as in the previous two, to the relationship between the Point, which represents the male polarity as the body of Bhairava and its contents, the energies distributed in the syllable AIṂ, which represents the female one. In the previous chapters, triads predominated (but not exclusively) with the Point as the fourth making groups of four. The purpose was to express the inner experience of the Triangle. This 'interiority' is represented graphically by the location of the syllable AIṂ within the Point, which is drawn both at the top of the syllable and in the centre of its triangular body. The same principle is now applied in this and the following chapter to the Hexagram. In this case, groups of six predominate. Indeed, they are emphasized to such a degree that we find six groups of six, each aspects of the others and the one reality.

This verse introduces the subject of this and the following chapter by presenting the basic configuration abstractly. The five Points mark the 'locations' in and around the Triangle in the centre of basic principles (see note and diagram 34/51-52ab). They are Voids – abstract 'space' that contains them and is their essentially non-phenomenal 'vacuous' nature. Thus, below the five Points are replaced by five Voids, understood as modalities (vṛtti) of the one Void, just as the five Points replicate the one Point that contains them. In terms of inner mantra – the Silent Sound of the Void of the Point – they are the Five Praṇavas that 'adorn' the 'black' (transcendental) Sky of the Primordial Seat (58/4-5ab). This is the Void of Vāgbhava, the first of the Praṇavas. Uttered first, it is considered to be their source. As such, it is the Void of which the Five Praṇavas are the modalities. 'Externally', the Points, Voids and Praṇavas are represented by the five sacred seats. Collectively they are called Kula. The Lord and his energy, Śiva and Śakti, that contain them are called Kaula (26/13cd-14ab). The Point and its energy is bliss. It expands out from the centre, even as it contains all the energies and aspects as the blissful and creative union of Śiva and Śakti. Thus the container is the contained. Contemplation is the perception of this oneness maintained by the movement of awareness that oscillates between immanence (the Point called the Circle of the Moon, the Cavity and the surface of the Sky) and transcendence (the Supreme Sky) as the latter 'penetrates' into the former and the former 'enters' the latter. The following passage, we have read already, is worth quoting again here, stressing as it does that the process takes place and is experienced as the activity of contemplation, profound and creative when the mind is in 'equilibrium':

> The aggregate, enveloped in bliss, functions within bliss. (Thus) there comes about the equilibrium (samatva) of the mind which is the bliss of emission (udbhava). In the middle of that is the subtle Liṅga, the Divine Liṅga that faces downwards. It stands in the centre of the Supreme Sky, in the middle of the Circle of the Moon. Then, perceived by the Inner Self, it enters the cavity (suṣira). He who is established in contemplation (samādhi) sees the surface of the Sky, that is, the Point. (Then) possession (āveśa), which is the arising of the bliss of consciousness, takes place. The experience of the proclamation (of the scripture) (āśravaṇapratyaya) is that this is one's own nature. KuKh 26/14cd-18ab.

Again, this is reality expressed as the oneness of the container and the contained – Kaula and Kula, which is one of the meanings of the expression 'Kulakaula' that denotes the Kubjikā tradition. From this perspective, the configurations of energy within the Void (which are the archetypes of emanation), are understood to be the source and essential nature of the tradition. This proceeds from them first internally, within the Point (as the Divine Current), to then issue out externally (as the Current of the Siddhas), first in the Hexagram and then out into the external world.

Again, the six are the Six Wheels in the subtle yogic body, here understood as six aspects of the bliss of the Void and configurations of its energy, to which the Tantra returns repeatedly in the following accounts.

8. The 'group' outlined in the previous verse is 'born of the mantra of the Yoga of the Yoginīs', that is, Vāgbhava, the syllable AIṀ (cf. 60/17 and note). AIṀ is the first of the Praṇavas which prefix all the mantras of the Kubjikā school. Thus it 'awakens' them and is their source. As such it is the Yoni experienced in the 'bliss of contemplation', which is its activity and essential nature.

9. Vāgbhava is the sonic embodiment of the energy that differentiates it and itself into all the configurations of energies that constitute the maṇḍala and the reality it represents. In the transcendental state reality is one and undivided, devoid of polarities or aspects. The arising of the energy of the Yoni entails the formation of the primary opposites – Śiva and Śakti – experienced in union as the transcendental and immanent aspects of the one reality. Thus, in a sense, one is the cause of the other. Separated by the contemplation – 'churning' – of the energies of the immanent aspect Uḍḍīśa Bhairava (the Self) is the illuminating Void in relation to Bhairavī whose energy is the configurations of energies enshrined in the letters that are aspects of his and her bliss. Thus, the realisation of one leads to that of the other even as it separates and unites them and 'the bliss of the Yoni' both generates differentiation and is the cause of the realisation of the oneness of Uḍḍīśa.

10. Bhairava 'illumines within the supreme abode' (59/63).

11. After teaching the fundamental principles in general terms, the Tantra turns to a brief, detailed description of the 'group of six' and its various functions. This is done by presenting it six times as separate groups. The exposition begins with the Six Wheels. These are in the subtle body, as the specification of the location of three of them confirms. However, they are also, and more essentially, within the Point in the centre of the maṇḍala and in the Hexagram. As such they enshrine the experience of the Void in the Centre and its Voids. Thus the Wheel of the Foundation reflects what has been said in the previous lines about the Lord and his energy that encompasses the Five Voids.

The Wheel of the Foundation is located on the border between immanence and transcendence – 'being' and 'non-being'. It illumines, as does transcendental Bhairava, the 'knowledge of the Yoga of Space', that is, of Śiva and Śakti that envelopes and pervades all the Wheels.

12. See below 60/41 and note.

13. Bhairava is the Self who illumines all things (59/27). Śakti is his light. He is bliss. She is the joy of his bliss. The Wheel of the Self-supported (svādhiṣṭhāna) is union of the Self, Bhairava, the Lord of Mantra who is the support and sustaining ground of all things as the Liṅga. The Yoni in which this Liṅga abides self-sustained is the Void.

14. See notes to 3/120-121, 25/10ab and 30/49cd-69cd.

15. This Wheel is in the navel of the body and so also, analogously, in the centre of the maṇḍala. As the centre it contains the whole maṇḍala with its six parts displayed in the Hexagram, symbolized as the land of Koṅkaṇa, the source of all the teachings. As the transcendent it is Supreme Space. It is immanent as the 'rays of pure knowledge', that is, the energies that constitute the maṇḍala (cf. 61/56cd-57ab).

16. 'The imperishable reality with six qualities' is represented by Vāgbhava and the maṇḍala with its six parts to which correspond the Six Wheels in the body.

17. The Ball is the Point in the Centre and the Summit of the maṇḍala. Just as the one maṇḍala is sixfold as each Wheel and remains the same maṇḍala, such is also the Point of Bliss in the centre. There it rotates marking, as it does so, the alternation of opposites – the two breaths, emanation and withdrawal, the manifest and the unmanifest. Its foundation is the Half Moon – the energy of the New Moon that nourishes its bliss from within. The Half Moon represents the arch of the breath along which the Ball of vitality rolls up and down as it enters and exits the body. The inner breathing is described in the next two verses.

18. This is the Saṁvartāmaṇḍala. See above, note to 2/14; cf 3/157cd-159, 45/41d, 51/24-25ab, 60/17b and 68/49d.

19. The Point in the centre is the channel that transports the energy of the inner vital breath that gives life to the individual soul. See 59/75cd-76, 86cd-87ab

20. Below (64/83) Fame is the goddess Kātyāyanī, 'the one deity of (all) the energies'.

21. The Tree is the Point. Fame is Vāgbhava, the energy of the Tree. The three triads may be the three seed-syllables in the corners of the Triangle, namely, HRĪṀ, ŚRĪṀ and KLĪṀ each of which consists of three letters. Or other three groups of three projected into the corners of the Triangle that transform the Point into the Triangle. The three triads may also be the nine letters of Navātman.

22. The letter A denotes the transcendental energy of the New Moon represented by the Half Moon (61/58cd-59). In accord with the general principle that what is above in a series of states contains all that is below it, the Half Moon drawn below the Point (= the Island of the Moon) of the syllable AIṀ is contained within it. The name given to it here – Aliṅga (= Anāmāliṅga) – suggests its relationship with the triangular Khaliṅga that contains it. The Island of the Moon is the Triangle. This, together with the Point in the centre, makes AIṀ. The Five Praṇavas are on both sides of it. Uttered first in the forward order and then in reverse. So we get three syllable AIṀ, the beginning, middle and end of the series.

23. YKh (1) says: The Liṅga that is within the capsule is the Liṅga (called) Mantra Bhairava.
sampuṭāntaṁ ca yad [g: taṁ] liṅgaṁ tad [g: taṁ] liṅgaṁ mantrabhairavam |

24. The Five Praṇavas precede and follow the recitation of Navātman along with Vāgbhava. This 'encapsulation' may also be represented graphically in the maṇḍala. The Five Voids are the Five Praṇavas understood to be modalities of Vāgbhava and the Five Wheels. See 55/2 ff. and note to 60/3.

25. Diagram 16. Mount Kaumāra

26. The pervader is Vāgbhava and its five aspects are the five Praṇavas. Mount Kaumāra is the Hexagram in the corners of which are the six parts of the Krama of ‘twenty-seven divisions’. Cf. above 7/7; 45/29 and 58/96cd-97ab.

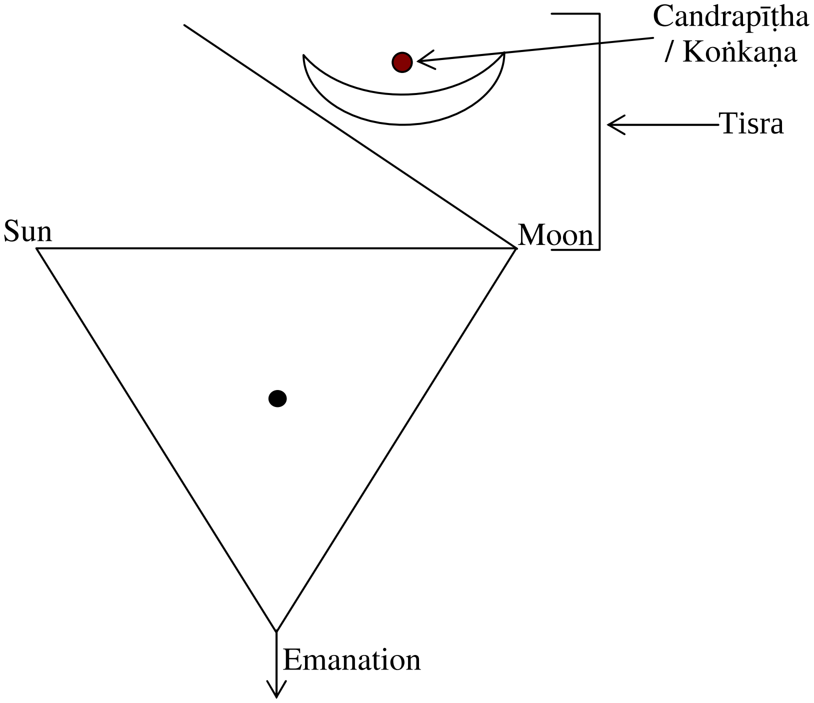
27. Udyāna Bhairava is the name of the Liṅga into which the goddess was absorbed (see KMT 1/69 quoted in intro. vol. 1, p. 33 and also 5836cd-37ab, note 34 and 60/62). The reference here, and throughout this chapter, to Udyāna Bhairava clearly alludes to the Liṅga situated on the Island of the Moon within which the goddess conceals herself (KMT 1/69). This Liṅga is symbolized by the Point in the centre of the Kramamaṇḍala situated in the End of the Twelve above the head. The yogi who manages to reach the Liṅga there and worship it, as Bhairava did, will witness the emergence of the goddess from it and receive the grace of her empowering Command. Bhairava is the Fire of the Void (see 59/32).

The series of flames are his energies and the empowering Command 'in the midst of the four sacred seats', that is, within the Triangle.

28. The Liṅga of Fire is Udyāna Liṅga, which is the source of the other Liṅgas and their sacred seats.

29. The three channels (Iḍā, Piṅgalā and Suṣumṇā) line the sides of the Triangle. They are in the subtle yogic body. Tisra represents the same triad held within the pure consciousness and energy of the deity 'above the four sacred seats', that is, the sphere of the Triangle, which is the domain of immanence and emanation.

Diagram 17. The Liṅgas of the Six Sacred Seats



30. See above, 6/164-165ab.

31. These three are the first of the six groups of six projected into the Hexagram listed at the end of this chapter (60/99-100ab).

32. Candrapīṭha is the sixth sacred seat represented by the Point of Vāgbhava (see intro. vol. 1, p. 106). As here, it is sometimes identified with Koṅkaṇa (see ibid. 660).Vāgbhava is 'the Command of the scalpel of awakened consciousness' (ājñābodhaśalākā). The Point that crowns it is at the summit of the ascent through the 'supports' where ultimate success (siddhi) is finally achieved (60/76). Abandoning the lower five levels, the Command penetrates into the transcendental emptiness and rests there in the supreme state of repose (60/89-

33. The sixteen sacred seats are the sixteen vowels represented by the lineage (santāna) of the Sixteen Siddhas (cf. 60/52) that are aspects of Bhairava (60/35cd-36ab) projected into the Triangle of Vāgbhava (see below 62/31-37 and diagram). See note to 63/10.

34. Concerning the Knot of Brahmā see above 7/39cd-40ab; 40/61-2ab and note and below 62/20-21ab.

35. These are the Five Praṇavas in the reverse order corresponding to the five sacred seats and the five Voids. Vāgbhava, here called the Knot of Brahmā, is supreme as the sixth Void that contains and is all the others and 'inferior' or immanent as one of the Five Praṇavas. In the next verse the supreme aspect is called Rudrāṇī, that is, Rudraśakti identified with Supreme Kālī who is the energy of the New Moon, that is, Kubjikā who is the 'black sky adorned with the Five Praṇavas' (58/4-5ab).

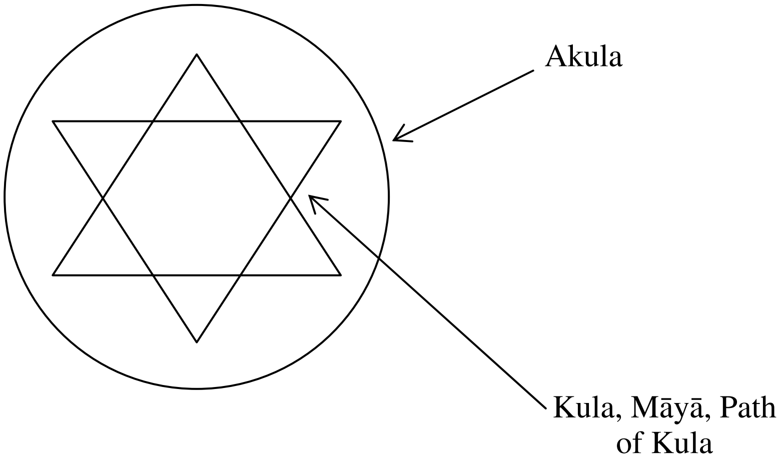
36. Cf. 60/32cd-33ab.

37. Raudrī is on the right side of the Triangle, which is that of the Sun, just as the left is that of the Moon (60/26). Thus the Kula of the Sun is the one associated with Raudrī and hence Kālī with whom she is identified.

38. The 'south' is the right, which is the side of the Sun (see previous note). Again, the 'south' is the direction of the seat of Koṅkaṇa, which is in 'the southern door' (60/71cd-72). This seat represents, as we have seen, the state of transcendental repose in which all things rest. It is the maṇḍala of the Point, the transcendental Akula that contains the Kula of the maṇḍala that can be represented schematically thus:

Diagram 18. Kula in Akula



39. Māyā here means the goddess as Mahāmāyā. She is the primordial will, the Transmental.

40. Bhairava is Akula represented by the Point that is filled with energy of Māyā and is the cause of the maṇḍala contained within his transcendental Emptiness, that is, the Path of Kula.

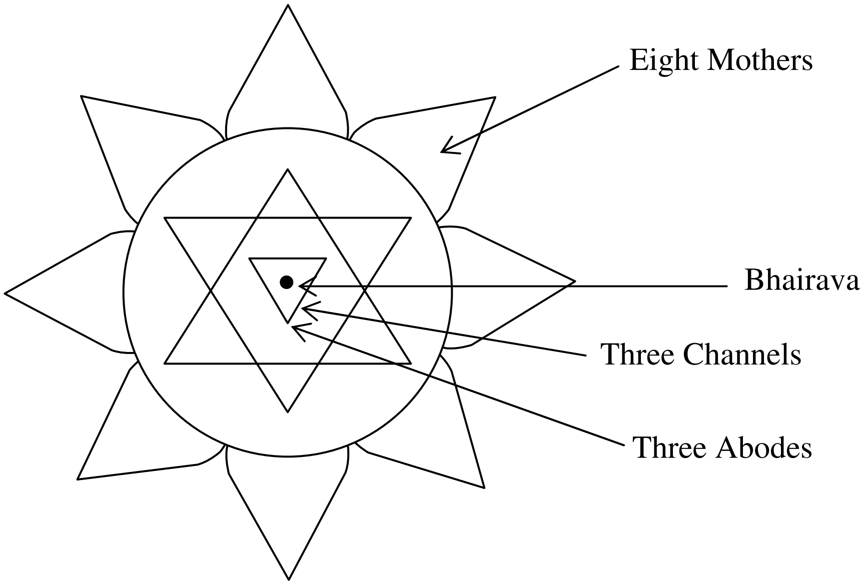
41. The Point both contains the maṇḍala and is contained by it. The god and the goddess are in the centre of one another.

The Sixteen Siddhas described in chapter fifty-six represent aspects of Bhairava's state in the Centre. They are aspects of the Point which is Bhairava's 'inner' body. The mantras of the Kaula Command are those of the Krama arranged around the Centre. These are the sonic form of the maṇḍala, Bhairava's 'outer' body. The three channels are the sides of the Triangle through which the inner breath moves. The Sixteen Siddhas are the vowels projected into the Triangle of Vāgbhava (see below 62/31-37 and diagram).

42. See note to 7/46-47ab.

43. Bhairavī is the energy (here called Mudrā) that courses through the maṇḍala, that is, Bhairava's body. The one energy of Mudrā assumes the form of the three Gestures. They are the energies of the sacred seats that are its 'abodes' in the corners that mark the extremities of the initial expansion of the energy of Mudrā in the Point to form the Yoni. As Speech, the goddess has eight aspects represented by the eight classes of letters. These are governed by the eight Mothers who manifest as the radiance of the light of the maṇḍala that encompasses it.

Diagram 19. The Maṇḍala of Bhairava and Bhairavī



44. Kula is the Triangle. See 58/87 and 59/67cd-68ab where Śiva, the Parasol for Shade, is said to be Space (ākāśa) and Haṁsa, the Self understood as the inner breathing and Unstrucking Sound.

45. The 'seed of Māyā' is Vāgbhava, the sonic form of the energy of Mahāmāyā that fills Bhairava (60/34cd-35ab) who is the Point. Its differentiated, manifest energies are contained in the 'outer' sacred seats in the maṇḍala.

46. Cf. 60/25. This is the goddess's Liṅga. It is the first of the six seats in the hexagram and the Liṅga in the middle of the Triangle. All the seats and energies are contained in the first Liṅga. Thus, those who are on the 'supreme plane' of the Void of the Point, attain complete realisation of all the aspects and energies of the one reality represented (= contained) in the sacred seats.

47. YKh (1) reads: anvayājñā – the Command of the tradition.

48. The energy of Gesture is the Supreme Principle (59/74-75ab). It is the energy of the Command within mantras that illumines all things, both consciousness and all that is unconscious (57/74cd). Bhairava is the Self who illumines all things (59/27) and Śakti is his pervasion and light (59/28 and note) represented as the Flame (śikhā) which is the energy of the lamp of the Point of consciousness (58/8ab and note to 59/79cd-76). Vāgbhava is the Lamp that illumines the bliss of Bhairava, the Supreme Self (60/9cd) in the centre of the Yoni and generates bliss throughout it by its light. It is also called the 'wick of knowledge' (59/9).

49. I suppose that this is a reference to the twenty-five principles distributed in the five sacred seats (see 46/1-9). In that context the seats are called the 'ornaments of Kula', implying that they are the Five Praṇavas, which are commonly referred to in this way. As the energy of Mahāmayā in the Point, she is Ciñciṇī, the goddess of the Tree of the Point. Within it she is one, spread out outside it by the 'bliss of the Yoni' generated by her union with Bhairava she assumes the form of the five seats and the Five Praṇavas each of which in their turn have five aspects. This is the usual configuration of the group of six that consists of five entities along with the one reality that contains them and is both their cause and all of them collectively.

50. Akula is Bhairava, the transcendental Void. Vīra is the Kaula adept who is here identified with Akula. Once he has realised the nature of Bhairava's energy and how it assumes multiple forms as and through the metaphysical principles, he attains Bhairava, the Supreme Self, which is his ultimate identity.

51. Candrikā is the New Moon (see note to 3/116). The goddess Pūrṇā/Amā, that is, Kuṇḍalinī, fills the Liṅga of the Point that thus drips with the nectar of immortality.

52. Kuṇḍalinī is 'reverse action', that is, the positive 'utterance of Māyā'. This is the power of grace that reverses the suffering and bondage Māyā causes in the state in which the individual soul is ignorant of its true nature and activity to the fundamental state of bliss and liberation of enlightened consciousness. In this way, it is the activity which fills the Void of consciousness with bliss (60/56-58b).

53. The mantra called Twelve Verses in its extended form lines the sides of the Triangle (see note 37 of chapter 11). It is in the Centre in its seed-syllable form (HSKHPHREṀ), to which the following verse refers.

54. The twelve Siddhas are Lords of the letters and the energies of the syllable. They pervade Emptiness by virtue of the 'divine offering'. This, I suppose, is the rite of adoration (pūjā) that takes place by means of the five offerings (upacāra) that is, the Five Praṇavas and all the principles and energies they contain (58/75-76ab and note).

55. See 60/98.

56. The energy of the Transmental leads to the realisation of Bhairava. Here it is deployed as the energies of the maṇḍala that lead to it.

57. The phases and aspects of the Divine Current are those of the Transmental energy of the Will which is free from desire (nirīha).

58. Concerning the Bliss of Stillness, see intro. vol. 1, p. 102 ff., 232, 423-424, and 434.

59. Just as there are eighteen phases or aspects marked by goddesses and their consorts of the outpouring of the Transmental in the Void of the Point, there are Sixteen Siddhas who are aspects of Bhairava's experience, here called the Attainment of Being (bhāvaprāpti). They are described in this perspective in chapter 56. The Lion here is Bhairava whose true nature and pervasive presence in the tradition, that is, in the maṇḍala is realised through the experience of the Sixteen Siddhas.

60. The Kubjikā tradition is called 'viparītakula' (60/52cd) and 'viparyayakula' (64/83) because it is inspired by the blissful 'reverse action' of the goddess as Kuṇḍalinī. This is the essence of the dynamic state that is liberation itself which gives rise to emanation (60/27) and liberates from the bondage of ignorance. See above, note to 60/43-44.

61. The Gaze of the Lion (siṁhāvalokana) is the most intense form of the Command (tīvrājñā) and the radiant energy (tejas) of the Siddhas. It is the way in which energy is transmitted from the deity.

62. Forty-eight letters (3 x 16) line the sides of the Triangle, the remaining two letters are on the two sides of the Point in the middle of the Triangle. Referred to as the two Siddhas, they are the letters Sa and KṢa. The first is the last letter of the alphabet whereas KṢa is a conjunct consonant. Although not a real letter, it is added on to the 49 letters to make 50. Thus they represent the aspect of reality that is on the 'border' and 'beyond' the energies of the letters that operate in the sphere of immanence. As such they represent two aspects of transcendence. Bhairava's transcendental energy – the Lion's Command – is attained from these two aspects of transcendence represented by the two letters by 'churning the Lotus of the Heart', that is, contemplating the Point in the centre of the Triangle which is in the End of the Twelve.

63. The same expression denoting the Triangle is found above 60/35cd-36ab (see note there).

64. Cf. 60/20 above where the three triads are mentioned by which the Liṅga is 'divided into three (trika)'.

65. See 60/43 and note.

66. See above, note to 60/41-42.

67. Māyā is Kuṇḍalinī, the form of the goddess in the universe, the subtle body of the yogi and the 'supreme' body of Bhairava. Her sonic form is Vāgbhava through which her blissful energy rises when 'uttered' inwardly within consciousness through the planes of immanence up into the Void of the transcendent and merges into it pervading it, as it were, with the bliss with which it pervades immanence. This rise is 'reverse action' through which the Void is filled perpetually with the eternal bliss of the energy of the Command, the 'nectar of the pure lotus' of the Triangle and the Point.

68. The 'three qualities' are all the triads represented by the Triangle. See above note to 59/78cd-79.

The following lines replace this sentance in YKh (1) (29/153cd-154) and are followed directly by the second sentance of the following verse:

Having pierced through the plane of the Void with the Passion (kāma) that arises from the union of both Śiva and Śakti, the form (vigraha) of the bliss of the essential nature of the Liṅga (manifests) within the two aspects of the closing and unfolding (of the energies) corresponding to the polarities 'with mind' and 'beyond mind'. (Although the goddess's) Form (mūrti) is one, due to (its) many varieties, it is of countless million forms. (Out of these) twenty-seven are said to be the principle ones.

śivaśaktyubhayoḥ [g: śivaśaktyaḥbhayo] saṅgād kāmo [g: dhamaṁ] yad upapadyate ||
tenākāśapadaṁ bhittvā liṅgātmānandavigrahaḥ |
nimeṣonmeṣayoḥ [g: nameṣo-] pakṣau samanonmanapakṣayoḥ [g: samanyo-] ||

69. 'Form' – mūrti – also called vidyāmūrti, is the sonic 'form' of the Vidyā of the goddess. The 'formless' aspect of the Goddess is Unstruck Sound. Mantras are the sonic forms of deities and so 'form' here and in the following lines simply means 'mantra'. Specifically, the mantra meant here is the goddess's seed syllable, Vāgbhava, which expands out into the full Samayā Vidyā of thirty-two syllables.

70. All the countless millions of mantras and Vidyās are essentially varieties of the one Vidyā of the goddess, the 'seed' or essence of which is Vāgbhava. The twenty-seven mantras of the Krama are the main ones. These are divided into six groups of 4-5-6-4-5-3 mantras. The first group of four, the four sacred seats, are described in the following passage. These are augmented by two more seats to accommodate another parallel scheme of which they form a part as one of six groups of six (60/99-100ab).

71. The Skyfarer is the Self (60/83). Concerning the association between the seat of Udyāna (< Oḍḍiyāna) and flight see intro. vol. 1, p. 81 and note.

72. The Lineage of the Child (baloli) is associated with Koṅkaṇa (see 60/71cd-72 and note). We are not told in this account which seat is associated with the lineage and transmission of the Eldest. Normally it is Oḍḍiyāna (> Udyāna). The Transmssion of the Youth – the Kaumārakrama is considered to be the main one.

73. Pūrnagiri is also associated with the Moon above (60/26). This is not the Moon in the centre. It is the Moon that is related to the Sun (in Jālandhara) and Fire (in Oḍḍiyāna) (see diagram in note to 60/28). Form is linked to the element Fire that burn here, which may be the reason why this seat is the repository of the 'bliss of form'.

74. All the attributes of the seats and the other components of the maṇḍala are aspects of the one reality and its activity understood collectively as the Void and its energy, deity and divine power. Thus all the parts of the maṇḍala are aspects of the one reality whose energy is bliss. They are, in other words, all modalities or aspects of the one pervasive experience of eternal bliss. Pūrṇagiri is the experience of the plenitude of that bliss. Kāmarūpa is the experience that that bliss fulfils all desires.

76. Cf. above 6/175-177ab.

77. The seat Tisra marks the confluence of the three currents of the vital breath that flow along the channels that form the sides of the Triangle. The individual soul is caught in the flow of these three currents and its fettered state persists as long as they continue to flow. By blocking them, the sides of the Triangle that hold it prisoner dissolve away and, the barrier between it and the transcendental Void of deity is removed and the individual soul merges into the Supreme Self.

The situation for Bhairava, the Supreme Self, is just the opposite of this. When the individual soul is bound, the Supreme Self constantly moves up and out beyond the sphere of immanence thereby abandoning the individual soul through the Aperture or Door of Brahmā located at the apex of the the End of the Twelve where immanence makes contact with the transcendent. By blocking the Aperture or bolting the Door, the Self is prevented from entering the transcendent and so flows down and out to pervade the sphere of immanence. Thus the individual soul is replaced, as it were, by the Supreme Self in the new liberated condition within the sphere of immanence, even as it is absorbed by it in the sphere of transcendence.

78. See above, 46/59cd-61ab.

79. The standard set of seats is four. This is the size of the first group of six in the Krama. We have observed that already in the KMT the fifth seat is considered to be an addition in some sense to this standard set that fits comfortably into the Triangle, thus heralding its development into the syllable AIṀ. In accord with the basic scheme, this passage concludes that the four seats all originated on the Island of the Moon, the place where the goddess transmitted the teachings to Bhairava for the first time that is represented symbolically by the triangle in the centre of the Kramamaṇḍala.

Note that we are told here that these sacred seats are not well known. This statement implies that the Śrīvidyā school has not yet developed because there these sacred seat are very well know and their form and content is practically the same as described in the Kubjikā Tantras. Moreover, they are given pride of place as the components of the innermost triangle of Śrīcakra but with no mention of the seat called Tisra.

80. The goddess is in the 'southern door' (dakṣiṇe dvāre) because there she is propitious (dakṣiṇā) (63/13).

81. Ṣaṣṭhīśa or Ṣaṣṭhanātha is also the name of the Siddha who governs the seat of Pūrṇagiri. Here he is Bhairava who, as his name literally means, is the 'Lord of the Sixth' seat. Ṣaṣṭha was the name of one of the first Kadamba kings to rule from Candrapara. See intro. vol. 3, p. 310.

82. The mythical sacred geography of the later Kubjikā Tantras related the Island of the Moon to the City of the Moon and these to the land of Koṅkaṇa. Although the City of the Moon – Candrapura – may well have been an actual city located in the land of Koṅkaṇa, the Island of the Moon was most probably associated with it in order to accommodate an earlier tradition that identifies the Island of the Moon – Candradvīpa – with the place where Matsyendranātha recovered the Kaula Tantras (see intro. vol. 2, p. 321). The extraordinary symbolic valence given here to the land of Koṅkaṇa as a sacred seat and the close relationship asserted between it and the other sacred sites, although hardly mentioned in the earliest Kubjikā sources, reflects, no doubt, the location of the tradition at the time of the redaction of the text. However, in order to accommodate the relatively new addition to the older symbolism, outer reality had to be altered. Koṅkaṇa is located in the Point in the centre within Candrapūrya, which in the outer world was in fact the capital of Koṅkaṇa. But there in the centre, Koṁkaṇa represents the foremost seat of authority and as the Centre it contains the Whole.

83. Diagram 20. The Head and Body of the Yoni

Tisra and Koṅkana symbolize the polarities of the one reality that nourish each other and maintaining its eternal existence manifest in the sphere of immanence by their constant unfailing alternation. Cause and effect, transcendence and immanence, follow each other like the day follows night and night follows day. Each gives life and being to the other.

84. The Tantra is telling us that the sacred seats are located in two places. They are projected into the Hexagram, which is the 'external aspect' of the Triangle. Moreover, they also exist in the outer world. They should be known and worshipped in all their modalities.

KuKh 60/79-83ab is a re-working of YKh (2) 34/10-14ab (see intro. vol. 1 p. 660-661) which says:

There are six sacred seats and six parts (prakāra) (of the maṇḍala) and even though the seats have arisen externally from the transmission (krama) with six parts, they are considered to be the first (and most important) in the tradition. They are the outer rays of many forms (made manifest) by the transmission (krama) of the Rule. They are famous and should be known as the first (and most important constituents) of the maṇḍala. The remaining (parts) are (made manifest) after that, separately and in due order. Once known the group of six seats, first of all, then one becomes a (true) member of the tradition. Without having known (them) one cannot be successful. The group of six sacred seats is the cause (of all success). Now I will tell (you) how they are realised on the subtle path. The great sacred seat is within one's own body. It is the one seat of six kinds.

ṣaṭ pīṭhāḥ [k, kh: - pīṭhā] ṣaṭprakārāś ca ṣaṭprakārakramād [k, kh: -kamād] api |

svadehe ca mahāpīṭhaṁ pīṭham ekaṁ ca ṣaḍvidham [k: ṣaṭ-; kh: dhadvidhaṁ] |

85. YKh (2) (34/13a): Without having known (them) one cannot be successful (ajñātvā naiva siddhyeta).

86. Cf. 60/62.

87. YKh (2) (34/17a) reads: (It is) supreme bliss, the bliss of the Yoni (parānandaṁ bhagāhlādaṁ).

There are two sets of opposites working together dynamically at different levels. One set is Udyāna and Jālandhara. The former represents the anti-clockwise rotation that generates the worlds from the Void and the Self. The latter represents the clockwise rotation that dissolves them back into the Emptiness of the solar Self. The first is the differentiated (sakala) condition of immanence, the latter the undifferentiated (niṣkala) state of transcendence.

The second pair are Jālandhara and Pūrṇagiri. The former is the solar breath (prāṇa) and the latter the lunar breath (apāna). The Sun of prāṇa recedes back into the 'abode of the breath', that is, the centre where the Point acts as the channel (nāḍī) that transports it (see 59/75cd-76, 86cd-87ab and 60/19). Then from there arises the Moon of the inner apāna as the emergence of the bliss. This is represented by Pūrṇagiri, the seat of the 'filling' breath (pūraka).

88. The process of churning is essentially the profound contemplation of the dynamic union of the opposites. In this case, the opposites are represented by the two inner breaths. 'Rubbing' against each other, moving back and forth, in and out of the dimensionless Point in the centre which is the ultimate 'abode of the vital breath' the bliss of their union develops there. When it has developed sufficiently to penetrate through Rudra's energy, that is, all the planes of Vāgbhava, the state represented by the seat Kāmarūpa is established.

YKh (2) (34/17cd-18): The Moon which is the bliss that is the undifferentiated (state) (niṣkala) of the vital breath arises by churning. Kāmarūpaka, called Rudra's energy, is established in the semen. Semen is said to be the Moon and is Sound whose form is the bliss, which is the Sound (of consciousness) (nāda).

vāyuniṣkalam ānandaṁ [k, kh: vāyuriṣṭaragānamda] mathanāj jāyate śaśiḥ [k, kh: śaśi] ||
rudraśaktisamākhyātaṁ [k: -tāt; kh: -tā] śakrasthaṁ [k, kh: śakra-] kāmarūpakam |
śakra indur ucyate [k, kh: śakra inducate] nādo [k, kh: nādaṁ] nādātmānandavigrahaḥ [k, kh: -ham] ||

89. See note to 5/76cd-7ab.

90. From the Point comes Unstruck Sound produced by the profound contemplation of the Three Channels and the forms of the vital breath that courses through them back and forth from the Point even as it abides within it. This powerful, blissful inner breathing rotates through its three phases in the channels that line the walls of the Triangle impelled by the rotating Point in the centre and the bliss it generates. Thus Tisra is the seat of the Triad of the Triangle that pulses blissfully in the Cavity of Brahmā (cf. 60/67cd-70ab and note).

91. In accord with the common paradigm of ascent, the lower sphere consists of multiple stages and aspects. The higher is essentially different. It is the Void of the perfect contemplation of Being, devoid of all possible internal distinctions or relationships with anything else. It is attained by setting aside the sphere of immanence in which states and energies are graded and set into relationship with each other in their essential oneness. In the transcendent the container and the contained are one. Koṅkaṇa's form is the Point within which Vāgbhava, the Kadamba Tree grows, drawing energy and life from it, it is contained within it. At the same time it is within the Bud of the Kadamba, the Point, and so is established within transcendental Śiva.

92. The exposition of the seats concludes with that of the six aspects of the bliss that is their essential experiential nature.

93. YKh (2): the Sun is the abode of Jālandhara (arkaṁ jālandharālayam).

94. 'Churning', 'passion' (sneha) and 'recollection' (smaraṇa) are amongst the terms that denote the intense contemplation brought about by the energy of the Transmental that sets these and other similar processes into operation that lead to the supreme level of consciousness which is the experiential state of the liberated condition of the deity.

95. Instead of this sentence YKh (2) (34/27ab) reads: By churning the vital seed (śukra) (the seat) called Tisra develops.
mathanād api śukrasya tisrākhyaṁ [k, kh: -khya] vardhamānakam [k, kh:

varddhamātrikaṁ] |

96. Concerning the Half Measure see above note to 2/41, 6/210 and 58/28. The three divisions are the sides and corners of the Triangle and all they represent.

97. Cf. above 60/49cd-50 and 83-84ab; see also 61/2cd and note.

98. The same set of six groups of six projected into the Hexagram is mentioned above (see 39/123cd-124 and note). See intro. vol. 1, p. 323 ff. The colophon of chapter 34 of YKh (2) refers to this passage as the Parāṣaṭkanirṇayasūtra. The Parāṣaṭka consists of these six groups of six.

99. YKh (2) (34/31cd) reads this line: The teaching which is the essence of the sacred seats has (thus) been explained as it is in reality.
nirṇayaṁ [k, kh: nirnnayaṁ] pīṭhasadbhāvaṁ kathitaṁ paramārthataḥ ||

Although there are several instances in this text of hiatus in a compound (see above, note to 3/76ab below 67/28c), they generally serve to accomodate the metre. As this is not the case here I have chosen to follow the reading in YKh (1), which avoids hiatus, even though the sixth syllable remains short.

NOTES OF THE TRANSLATION OF CHAPTER SIXTY-ONE

1. This chapter continues with the exposition of the remaining groups of six that constitute the unfolding experience of the planes of realisation of this part of the Krama. The previous chapter dealt with the sacred seats, the following passage opens with a presentation of the goddesses and Siddhas who reside in the sacred seats from the same sophisticated metaphysical perspective.

2. There is essentially only one sacred seat in the body (60/83), one Liṅga (61/20cd), one Kula, one Siddha (61/39) and only one bliss (60/49cd-50). Each is the one reality variously understood and each is sixfold. In the same way there is only one goddess who, in consonance with the six planes of realisation marked by the seats, progressively unfolds along with them revealing herself as the goddess within each one of them. Moreover, in accord with the common principle of the logic of this symbolic system, each goddess is the one goddess who is all of them (see for example, 61/8 and 61/10).

3. YKh (2) (34/2cd) reads this sentance: And she is the leader of the sacred seats who with the six (seats) illumines relative distinctions.

pīṭhānāṁ [k, kh: pīṭhanāṁ] nāyikā [k, kh: nāyakāṁ] caiva ṣaḍbhirbhedaprakāśinī [k, kh: -prakāśināṁ] ||

Bhairava is the Self who illumines and the goddess gives him Light.

4. YKh (2) 34/3cd: She is progressively established and dissolves away in the course of churning (manthāna) the six sacred seats (manthāne kramaśaḥ [k, kh: kramadho] sthitā ||).

5. Cf. 59/4.

6. According to presentation of the five seats above in chapter six Khageśī is the goddess of this seat who is said to be 'well known as Kubjikā' (6/31, cf. 61/23). Kubjikā is the Moon (7/55cd-56ab) who emanates from the core of Śiva's being as the light of the moon (7/52cd-53ab and note). Kubjikā is Khageśvarī because she moves in the Sky of Pure Consciousness. She is Nityaklinnā (the Perpetually Wet One) (59/68cd-69ab) because she oozes with the juice of consciousness secreted from the Point in the centre of her Yoni. In this representation of the six sacred seats Kubjikā in these two aspects is present in all of them as Śavarī (also called Samarī, see note on 6/65) identified with the Yoginī Koṅkaṇā who is the deity of all the seats (61/10). The Śavarī of each seat generally has two names. Each of them develops an aspect of the experience of the highest reaches of expanded consciousness. Here these six are said to be aspects of the letter E. Elsewhere, however, they are said to be aspects of the letter A, which is the phonemic representation of the goddess Anāmā (61/22).

The correspondences can be tabulated as follows. Note that the deities in the first five seats according to this account are those of the five seats described above in chapter six.

7. Table of the Goddesses and Experience of the Six Sacred Seats

Seat	Śavarī / Samarī	Other name	Experience
Udyāna	Kubjikā / Klinnā	-	Illumines, develops tejas
Jālandhara	Kulaśavarī	Cāmuṇḍā	Pervades the seats
Pūrṇagiri	Koṅkaṇā	Klinnā	Differentiation, breath suspension
Kāmarūpa	Maṅgalā	Nandā	Equal everywhere
Mātaṅga	Madanā	Mātaṅgasamayā	Beyond Mind and With Mind
Koṅkaṇa / Kośala	Koṅkaṇā	Ghūrmaṇī / Anāmā	Inner Activity of Authority in the seats

7. YKh (2) 34/5cd: Again, by the awakening of (the power of the) letters, she is Śāṅkarī, (the goddess) Ciñciṇī of the Kula.

sā [k, kh: sa] cākṣaraprabodhena [k, kh: -prabhodena] śāṅkarī kulaciñciṇī ||

8. See note to 6/131.

9. See diagram 21 in note 26.

10. This expression is not common in the Kubjikā Tantras or indeed those of other schools. Another example is found in the KuKauM (3/141) in the context of a presentation of the various types of rosaries and their efficacy as aids to the recitation of mantras.

(The various types of rosary) bestow success in accomplished Yoga (siddhayoga) by repeating the mantra here very quietly. By repeating it mentally one attains liberation and equality with the goddess.

siddhayogaṁ prasiddhyanti upāṁśujapanād iha |
mānasena tu mokṣaṁ tu devīsāmānyatāṁ vrajet ||

11. The mountain of Kula is the Hexagram see 60/23 and note. The king of this mountain is Bhairava.

12. Kula is the aggregate of seats and their contents. Kaula is the union of Śiva and Śakti that pervades them. See note to 60/3.

13. Below we are told indirectly that the seat is called 'Pūrṇa' – 'full' because it is associated with the Full Moon. The energy of the goddess there is experienced (= 'manifests') by abandoning the two breaths, a process described below as the conjunction of the left and right currents of the breath (61/25).

14. One would not expect the goddess here to be called Koṅkaṇā, but this name is confirmed below (61/25).

15. Vāgbhava is the source of the delight of this aesthetic savour (58/31). Manmatha is the Wheel of the Point (binducakra) that is split and rubbed by the process of churning (58/70cd-72ab) that satisfies the Yoni and fills it with aesthetic savour.

16. She is also called Ciñciṇī (61/26).

17. The fifth sacred seat is Tisra which is identified with Mātaṅgapīṭha (see 6/163cd, 60/67cd-68 and intro. vol. 1, p. 85 ff.

18. Elsewhere this place is called the House of Koṅkaṇa (61/28).

19. The Fire of Bhairava, the Self, burns in the Point in the centre where Koṅkaṇa is located.

20. YKh (1) (29/188b) reads: adorned with the syllable of Koṅkaṇā (koṅkaṇākṣarabhūṣitā).

21. The MSs of YKh (1) (29/189b) suggest the reading: the Triangle of the world (trikoṇaṁ bhuvanasya).

22. The maṇḍala represents the one multiple reality in two conditions – internal and external – simultaneously. Neither is complete without the other (cf. 61/29). The six seats and all else associated with them are within Vāgbhava, the Triangle of the Earth in the centre. But they are not manifest and active there until they are also ‘poured out’ from it and projected outside it into the Hexagram. Then the ‘inner’ is related to the ‘outer’ as the deity is to its creation.

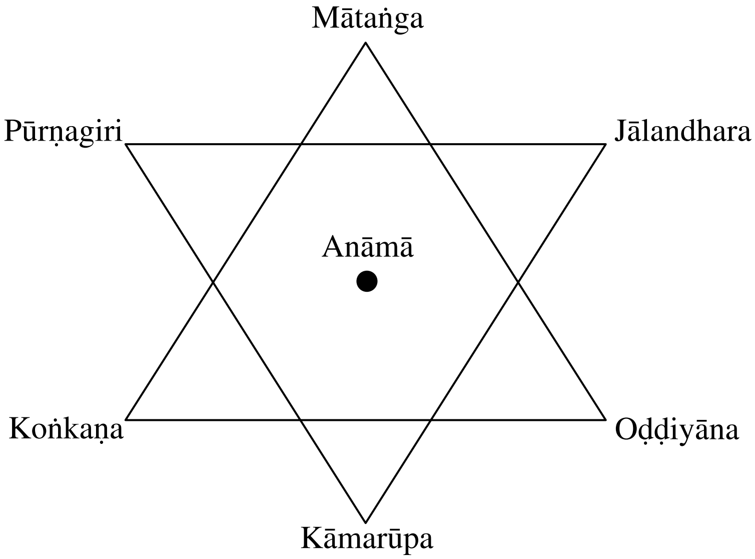
23. Presumably, these are the two forms of the goddess named in each seat.

24. Each of the six sacred seats is projected into one of the six small triangles that make up the corners of the Hexagram and the goddesses that are in the centre of their seat are ‘enclosed’ or surrounded by the ‘triple quality’ that lines the sides of each of these triangles.

25. It appears from the context that the Mothers in this case are the six forms of the goddess in the sacred seats in the corners of the Hexagram.

26. Anāmā in the centre is Parā the sixfold energy – Ṣoḍhā – who contains within herself in potential form the six energies of the seats displayed and made manifest in the Hexagram (see 58/38cd-39ab, 61/18 and note). She is the perpetually active energy which ‘rolling around’ ‘churns’ the Yoni that unfolds as the Hexagram.

Diagram 21. The Hexagram of the Six Sacred Seats



27. Kula here means goddess or 'energy'. The one Kula is sixfold as the six Kulas. These six are the Divine Current of the sacred seats, their inner form within the stream of the energy of the goddess. Projected into the corners of the Hexagram, together they form a single Kula. At the same time they are six, each represented by a goddess and her corresponding energy (kalā) and Siddha. These correspondences can be tabulated as follows:

8. Table of Seats, Goddesses, Energies and Siddhas

Sacred Seat	Goddess	Energy	Siddha / Bhairava
Oḍḍiyāna	Kubjikā	Principle of the Intellect	Oḍḍīśa
Jālandhara	Śavarī	Ādya	Caryā Bhairava
Pūrṇagiri	Koṅkaṇā	Śāṅkarī	Ṣaṣṭha Bhairava
Kāmarūpa	Maṅgalā	Ciñciṇī	Ānanda Bhairava
Mātaṅga	Mātaṅgī	Kuṇḍalī	Mātaṅga
Koṅkaṇā	Koṅkaṇā	Vimalā	Koṅkaṇa

28. See above, note to 59/82.

29. See above, note to 60/85cd-86ab.

30. Above, the goddess of this seat is called Klinnā (61/11-12ab).

31. See note to 61/11-12ab.

32. 'Fame' (kīrti) means spritual 'energy' or 'power', that is, Śakti. The four energies of the Triangle are Vāmā, Jyeṣṭhā, Raudrī and Ambikā. The four 'letters' are the 'three and a half measures' of the utterance of Vāgbhava (see intro. vol. 1, p. 381 ff.).

33. Above the goddess of this seat is called Mātaṅgasamayā (61/14cd-15ab).

34. See 60/43-44 and note.

35. The 'Houses' are the six small triangles in` the corners of the Hexagram. Below they are also identified with the Six Wheels that are also projected into the corners of the Hexagram (63/10).

36. See note to 61/18.

37. YKh (1) (29/200ab): This is the Divine Current of the sacred seats and the sacred seat is the Kula of the Void (kha) which is of six kinds.
divyaugham [k, gh: devyoyam] pīṭhānāṁ pīṭhaṁ khakulaṣaḍvidham ||

38. The Supreme Power of the Command in the centre of the Point is called the Teacher's Mouth when it is understood to be the source of the teachings (See intro. vol. 1, p. 323, and 478). These stream from it as the phases of the flow of the Command embodied in polarities as the Siddhas and the goddesses who are their energies. Within the Point, it flows as the Divine Current described in chapter 57. When it streams out of the Triangle into the Hexagram, it becomes the Current of the Siddhas, also called the lineage of Siddhas or the Siddhakrama (61/37cd-38, 46). The entire process is complex and yet one. In order to describe and hence, in a sense explain it, although ultimately, of course, no explanation is possible, the Tantra presents it repeatedly as a series of processes set into one another. The channel of the flow is formed by the 'locations' that contain them. These are the sacred seats. First the source must be known and experienced directly and then the seats that are the dimensions of the experience of the dynamism of immanence. Next come their contents. These are the Siddhas and the goddesses who are the aspects of the flow that represent the power-holders and their power, respectively. The power-holders wield the authority of the perceivers in each sphere of the outpouring to experience its contents. Here, where subject and object are barely distinct, as two aspects of a unitary experience, they share in its contents embodying it each in their own way, as described in the cryptic style of our text. In this aspect also, as the others, each of the six are one reality, in this case understood to be Bhairava, the Lord of Kaula, the Hexagram representing the Void.

39. The pervasive light of knowledge of the teachings shines in the sacred seats. This is experienced first in the manner described. Embedded in this contemplation (vicāra) is the stream of the series of Siddhas who are the enlightened states of subjectivity that experience them. If one could talk of succession or simultaneity in this pre- and trans- temporal core of reality, one would say that they arise simultaneously, as aspects of the one Self, the Lord of Kaula, when his Light is experienced. See 58/26cd-28ab. Concerning the Ocean and the shore, see above 14/64cd-66ab and 17/49 and notes.

40. Cf. 3/90. Bhairava, the sacred Fire of the Self, that burns in the Point in the centre is the king of the mountain of Kula (61/9 and note).

41. Pūrṇagiri is 'full' because it represents the Full Moon (61/11-12ab and note) and because it is full of the bliss the Siddha of this seat experiences.

42. The Siddha in Kāmarūpa is enveloped in 'Māyā', that is, the energy of the Command. He is in the middle of the triangle of that 'House' of the Hexagram which replicates, as do the others, the Triangle in the centre full of the fifty worlds governed by the lords and energies of the letters.

43. The Triangle of this House is referred to here as the Ocean, as is the Triangle of the Yoni in the centre. The energy of the Siddha of this seat is that of the Stone, that is, of the Point in the middle of the Ocean of the Yoni. He is encompassed by the Great Knowledge of the pure consciousness of Bhairava whose 'body' is the Stone.

44. YKh (1) (29/207a) reads this line: Koṅkaṇa, who is Kula, is established in the location of the pure (energy of knowledge) (vimalāsthāna).

vimalāsthānamadhyasthaṁ koṅkaṇaṁ ca kulātmakam |

45. The seats, Siddhas (also called Bhairavas) and goddesses are the first three of the six groups of six (60/99-100ab).

46. YKh (1) (29/208) reads: (There are) six Siddhas and the six sacred seats. By filling the seats and by the power of Bhairava's Command they (all) arise in one place.

ṣaḍiḥ siddhāḥ [g: ṣaṭsiddhā] ṣaḍiḥ [g: ṣaḍi ṣaḍi] pīṭhāḥ [g: missing] pīṭhānāṁ bharaṇādapi [g: -dāya] |
bhairavājñāprabhāvena ekasthānodayātmakāḥ [k: -daśāyakaṁ; g: dapāyakaṁ; gh: -daśāyaka; ṅ: -daśāyakaṁ] ||

47. See 61/30 and note.

48. See above, note 61/2cd-3.

49. Literally 'the one (who is denoted by the) letter Kha', that is, 'kham', the Void. As the one Siddha who is all six, Ciñciṇīnātha is the transcendental Void that contains the plane of immanence, the features of which are prefigured as Voids within the Voidness.

50. The Triangle of the body of AIṀ contains the three measures of sonic energy of the series of the fifty energies of the letters. The conjunct consonant KṢa is the last of the series that leads up into the 'letterless silence' of transcendence through the 'half measure' above (see diagram in note to 58/29-30). Conversely, in the process of descent, the energy from the Void beyond streams down through the 'half measure' into the 'door' of the letter KṢa by means of which the sonic energies fill the Triangle below.

51. I suppose the Place of the Jar (ghaṭasthāna) in the throat is meant here. See note to 5/72cd-73ab.

Travelling down, the following Siddhas exert their ‘authority’ by releasing the energy of the Command they govern into the centres of the subtle body they occupy through and as the processes described in these verses. From the End of the Twelve down through the Cavity of Brahmā, the descending energy of the life-giving vital breath opens up a path through the throat centre between the two breaths releasing the ‘nectar of the Void’, lending access to the experience of the pervasive presence and activity of the goddess’s energy.

52. When the goddess emerges from the Liṅga and transmites the grace of her Command to Bhairava, she names him ‘Mitra’ – ‘Friend’ – because of the pure spiritual friendship she feels they have for one another. This is the name of the Siddha of Kāmarūpa, the seat of the present Age of Strife. These lines, if I have understood them correctly, relate the Siddha of this seat to the aspect of consciousness which distinguishes the mortal from the immortal, falsity from truth. The insight into what is beneficial – ‘mitra’ – is ‘accomplished’ – ‘siddha’ – in the seat of consciousness whose nature is ‘passion’ (kāmarūpa), the pure will. Thus, Mitra is the Siddha of Kāmarūpa.

53. Mātaṅga, the Siddha of the fifth seat, is ‘madly pāsionate’ (matta), like an elephant (mātaṅga) in rut. He represents the mind, filled with the ‘passion’ of the life-force in the Point in the centre. He is called a ‘yogi’ as he is absorbed in the contemplation of the emanation of Fire of passion on the ‘six planes’. Thus his ‘mind’ (i.e. consciousness applied to contemplation) delights in the ‘nectar’ of its own ‘authority’, empowered by the energy of the Transmental. The ‘body of passion’ is the Triangle, the Yoni, pervaded by the energy by which the sonic energies and forces are differentiated and primed to make their contribution to the outpouring of emanation. YKh (1) (29/214a) calls this pervasive energy Vimalā, the ‘Pure One’ (vimalā) who is stainless bliss (vimalā nirmalānandā). Koṅkaṇa is the place (sthāna) of Vimalā and so we may assume that these lines refer to it.

Descending through the series of energies of the letters in reverse, the end merges into the source from which it begins – Bhairava, the Fire of the Self that burns in the Lotus of the Point in the centre. Contained in the sonic energy of Vāgbhava it pervades the six planes and is experienced as the nectar-like bliss of its consciousness that exerts its power throughout them.

54. The sonic forms, that is, mantras of the god and the goddess are referred to as ‘lions’. The transmission is that of the lion (siṁhakrama) and, like the other Kaula traditions (āmnāya), it is the teaching of the lion (siṁhadarśana) (see intro. vol. 2, p. 334 ff.). In this context the two lions are the Siddha and the goddess united in each seat, constituting the transmission of the Siddhas accomplished and filled with the bliss of the states of union – Yoga – in the six seats and all else that is set in this measure of six.

55. YKh (1) (29/207c): by churning the Moon.

56. YKh (1) (29/218cd): Or the sixfold Self that is intent (on realisation) (prapannātman)* is secondarily designated as the six sacred seats.

*Another possible reading suggested by MS Ṅ is: Or the sixfold Self that exerts itself (prayatnātman) ṣaḍvidhaṁ [all MSs: -dhāṁ] vā prapannātmā [g: -māṁ; ṅ: prayannātmā]

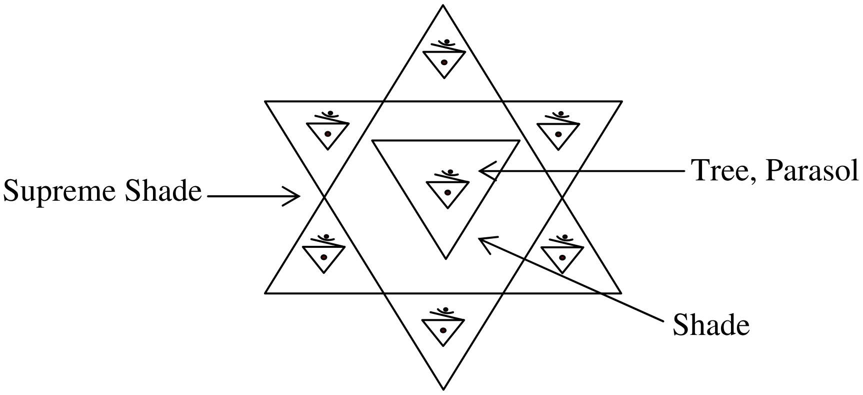
ṣaṭpīṭham upacaryate [k, gh, ṅ: -pīṭhaṁ tu pracaryate; g: ṣapīṭha-] ||

57. This sentence reads in YKh (1) (29/219c): The Self that is associated with external consciousness (bahirbodhayutātmānaṁ) is of six kinds.

58. See above 60/99-100ab and note.

59. Like the sun that shines on a tree or an umbrella castes a shadow around it, similarly, the Light of the deity shining on the Point gives rise to the 'shade' of Śiva's pervasive presence and that of his Śakti. Within the body the Shade of energies is the influence exerted everywhere by consciousness. Although one, its influence varies according to the instruments through which it operates, that is, onto which it castes its 'shade'. Internally this Shade is the network of energies that comprise the maṇḍala. The Supreme Shade is the supreme energy manifest through its radiant energies as these six groups of six projected into the Hexagram. Cf. 63/6 and note.

Diagram 22. The Supreme Shade



60. Summing up in this way the sixfold division of the sacred seats projected into Vāgbhava and the Hexagram, the text turns to another presentation of the maṇḍala as aspects of the Vāgbhava progressively merging into Emptiness from the Hexagram inwards to the Triangle and the Point and its energy. The previous verse listed six names of Vāgbhava, this one lists six names for the Point above and in the centre of it and in the Hexagram. Each name denotes the Point in the centre of the triangle at each corner of the Hexagram that replicates the Point in the centre of the entire Hexagram.

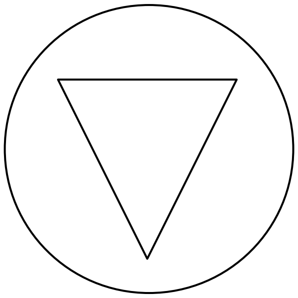
These are followed by the four aspects of Kailāsa, that is, Meru, the Triangle full of letters, according to the modalities of its activity and states as 1) bliss, 2) emanation 3) the teacher and 4) within Vāgbhava.

61. The Point contains all the maṇḍala and its parts both individually and collectively. In this aspect it contains the Triangle. Previously we observed how it contains the Hexagram (see note to 60/33cd-34ab).

Diagram 23. The Wheel of the Point with Three Measures



62. It appears that lines 49cd to 53ab are inserts as this line is out of context here and so makes no sense. In YKh (1) this line follows directly after what is line 61/49ab here, that is: ‘The Self which is established in external being is of six kinds’. Read together the meaning is clear: Bhairava, who is the Self, may also be present in the six seats as his pure transcendental state can be realised in each one of them just as it is in the centre of all of them. The supreme state of Bhairava, who is Supreme Śiva, pervades all the seats and, indeed, all that exists in such a way that it can be experienced completely in all the states the seats ‘contain’ just as it is in every single thing. When this takes place the inner lunar breath flows into that of the Sun and they are united and ‘abandoned’, this is, absorbed into the transcendental consciousness of deity. Thus the pure undivided (niṣkalā) energy of the goddess here called Moonlight (= the New Moon) and Śāṅkarī (61/25) or Klinnā (61/11-12ab), manifests.

63. YKh (1) (29/221cd-222) reads: The Moonlight arises within one’s own body which is the instrument (of realisation) by the falling away (nipāta) of the Sun and Moon brought about by the development of the agent of the Moon, then by the piercing (vedha) of the knowledge of the senses (one receives) Śambhu's teaching.

candrasūryanipātena [k, gh: -vipātena] candrikā ca prajāyate ||
*candrakārakavṛddhena [k, gh: -vṛddhaiśca; ṅ: -vṛddhai ] svakāyakaraṇātmani |
indriyajñānavedhena [k, gh: indrajajñāna-; ṅ: indrayajñāna-] tadā śambhūpadeśakam [k, gh, ṅ: sambho-; g: saṇtho-] ||

The reading of YKh (1) clarifies that the 'instrument of realisation' is the 'Moonlight', that is, the energy of the New Moon. This operates when the inner breathing, symbolized by the alternation of the Sun and Moon, which sustains the embodied, immanent state of consciousness, ceases. Once the Sun and Moon have set, the energy of the Command of the New Moon penetrates and pervades the energies of the body, mind and senses, intensifying them and thus enabling them to receive the teachings and experience the reality to which they refer directly.

64. The City of the Moon is the Point in the centre that radiates its lunar rays out into the body and the world. It is filled with the Moon of Vāgbhava that contains all the energies of the letters, here called the 'gems of knowledge'. Thus the Tantra suggests that the centre of the maṇḍala is like the navel of the body where the Wheel Full of Gems (maṇipura) in which Kuṇḍalinī sleeps is located (cf. 60/10cd-12 and note for references).

65. The energy of the Half Moon is within the Point in the centre (see note to 60/21). It is the energy of the New Moon here called Anāmā and is the foundation of the inhaled and exhaled breath (60/16) and 'the life' of the maṇḍala, Śiva's Kula. The source of the nectar of the inner Moon of the Point, it nourishes even the Supreme Lord with bliss. It is the first letter in the Triangle and is located in the lower corner, which is that of Kāmarūpa. Koṅkaṇa is in the centre. The individual soul develops spiritual energy and insight in these two 'places'. The first is at the beginning of the spiral of Kuṇḍalinī's pneumatic energy that moves round in an anticlockwise spiral within the Triangle of phonemic energies. The second is where this movement reaches its climax in the centre. These two places, the beginning and end, are especially powerful, as are the beginning and end of the movement of the breath.

66. The Three Trees 'growing' in the sacred seats in the corners of the Triangle contain the energies and aspects of consciousness as the mind and intellect of the Self (see 46/21cd-25, 61/91 and notes). When they are 'split apart' individual consciousness penetrates into the source of their vitalizing force and its own and traces its flow through the five vital breaths. These are first made one by finding perfect balance in the unity of the energy of the lunar 'equal breath' of the Self which, amongst them, is the 'living being', that is, the individual soul. Thus united they merge spontaneously into the the transcendental Void and the 'motion of the Moon' of apāna is brought to a halt and the Sun of prāṇa is abandoned.

Thus the supreme goal is attained (62/11) and the individual Self attains perfect repose and complete merger (61/81) along with the breath.

67. The Tantra now goes on to present a mantra (61/61-67). Its form is uncertain, as I have not been able to trace a source where it appears in a complete, uncoded form. Moreover, we are not told how this is to be used and how it relates to the maṇḍala or, indeed, what was said before. Two more mantras dedicated to the goddess are inserted in a similar way into the text further ahead (61/73-74, 76-78).

68. YKh (1): The letter Ka (MS Ṅ: ku), the letter U (MS G: Ū) and the letter E as the third.

69. Vaiṣṇavīśakti is Mahāmāyā (see intro. vol. 1, p. 158), who is represented by the syllable Vāgbhava.

70. Time is a process of continuous differentiation of moments one from another. It cannot exist in a single undifferentiated reality. The differentiation of the energies of the one energy, their separation from one another and merger are the inner breathing of the Kulakrama. Although, this is the process of manifestation and its products mark the passage of time, it is not temporal. Thus Kālī, the goddess of Time, although timeless, generates time by arousing the energies of Kula to assume manifest form.

71. 'Skull' is one of the names for the Point (see 58/41cd-43 and 61/51-52).

72. Apparently, this and the next verse present the Vidyā of Mahākālī.

73. Above the Supreme Shade is said to be the six groups of six (61/49cd). But here, it is more likely that it is the Point, which is sometimes called 'Shade' (57/43cd-44ab). The Shade of Hara is the goddess, his energy (63/6).

74. The maṇḍala of the sixteen vowels is described below in a different context (see 62/31-37 and diagram). Projected into the triangle of Vāgbhava, the seventeenth energy of the New Moon is represented by the syllable that is 'mounted on the pure path'. It connects the sixteen energies of the Sun and Moon in the sphere of immanence to that of transcendence where the one energy (the 'seventeenth'), which is the source of the others, courses on the 'pure path' of the Void.

75. See above, note to 26/75.

76. As the first letter of the alphabet, the letter A represents the source of all the other phonemic energies that constitute the one supreme energy of consciousness, that is, the energy of the New Moon symbolized by the Half Moon (61/58cd-59).

77. YKh (1) (29/249c): Then she who is the New Moon and the Mother is the energy of action (tadā sā [k, gh: mā] tu kriyā śaktir).

78. The vital force (prāṇa) that manifests as the breath of the body is the individual soul (jīva). Analogously, the inner breathing of the Void of Śiva's pure conciousness is Bhairava, the Supreme Self. He is called Haṁsa, the Gander. Like the external breath, it has two aspects. One is the Moon (of apāna) and the other the Sun (of prāṇa). The rhythmn of the external breathing marks the passage of time, just as the dawning and setting of the sun and the moon mark the passage of day and night. The energy of the Gander, which is its essential nature as the energy of consciousness, is experienced by 'blocking the Gander's Abode' that is, the goddess's energy which is the channel (nāḍī) (59/75cd-76) through which the inner breath flows. When it is blocked the outflow down into the sphere of immanence and emanation is checked and so it flies within the transcendental Void.

79. YKh (1) (29/250cd-251ab) reads this verse thus: She is Haṁsinī, who precedes the Gander (and yet) is in the middle of the Gander on the middle plane (madhyame pade). By dividing one plane (of the Krama) from another, she blocks the aggregate of the planes (of the Krama)

haṁsādir haṁsamadhyasthā [g: haṁsādi-] haṁsinī madhyame pade ||
padāt [k, gh: yadāt] padavibhāgena padarāśinirodhakaḥ [gh: ṣada-; ṅ: padarāgi-] |

80. Haṁsī is the energy that impels the vital breath and so 'precedes' and instigates it. Mantra and the energy of mantra flow in the stream of the breath. The parts of mantra, its energies and the states and levels of realisation to which they lead and correspond are differentiated by the energy of Haṁsa, the foundation and source of the breath's vital force. The same energy fills it with vitality and consciousness and so is also in the 'middle' of it. Speech and Breath work together. The flow of the stream of the energy of the inner vital breath differentiates the energies of Speech and configures them to form the parts of the mantras that constitute the Krama thus awakening it and rendering it effective.

81. The vital force is in the Moon in the middle of the Triangle and the Moon is in the breath. The container, as usual, is the contained. The Sun is the inner energy of the Moon. Both of them are within the two emissions of the energy of the Triangle. These are the Sound (nāda) and the Point (bindu) (63/98), which are the inner aspects of the flow of the two breaths.

82. The third form of emission between those of the two breaths is the source – Yoni – of the other two and all the energies and processes leading up to the unity of transcendence and down into the emanation of diversity. Thus it is both 'one and many', even as it transcends this and all other polarities. The following verse describes the immanent aspect of the emission which is 'many', configured into the geometries and resonances of the maṇḍala.

83. YKh (1) (29/254a): (As the Triangle) it has three parts (tripada) and (as the Hexagram) it has six parts and is pervasive. (tripadaḥ [g, ṅ: -da] ṣaṭpado vyāpī).

84. The activity of the energy of the vital breath is sequential on the plane of immanence of the individual Self in the body and non-sequential in the Void of the 'form' (parigraha) (61/99) of the Supreme Self, which is Bhairava.

85. YKh (1) (29/258c): in the centre of the Moon (MS G in the centre of Śiva).
śaśimadhyagatas [k, gh: -madhyaṁ-; g: śivamadhyagatam; ṅ: -madhye-] tūṣṇī [gh: ṭūṣṭī]

86. Below we are told that: 'The Silent One is in the centre of the (one) silent (reality) and is called the letter AIṀ' (62/102). The 'silent reality' is the Point within which Vāgbhava rests in the transcendental silence symbolized by the New Moon. Again, the mind (manas) is in the middle of the Silent One (62/66). Thus the Kadamba Tree symbolizes the mind, which is modified into fire and the intellect, which is the Bilva. These along with the Tamarind Tree that represents the mind-stuff are immersed in oneness (see 46/21cd ff. and notes) and are associated with the Wheels (see also 61/60).

These verses describe a series of states ranging inwards from the outer Krama that progressively merge into one another. These are: 1) The sequence of the Krama → 2) The Bird Haṁsa of the energy of the vital breath → 3) The Silent One → 4) The Kadamba (Mind) → 5) The Bilva (Intellect) → 6) The Tamarind (Mind-stuff) → 7) The Command of Greatness (Supreme Energy / Nameless) → 8) The eighth which is the sphere of Jyeṣṭhā and is the highest. The last two are repose and merger in the Abode of Bliss, which is Śiva's consciousness (61/81).

87. YKh (1) (29/260ab): (She is) the state (avasthā) which is supreme bliss, the Command of Greatness (mahimājñā) in the Kulakrama.
*avasthā [k, gh, ṅ: -sthāṁ] paramānando [k, g, gh, ṅ: -nandā] mahimājñā [gh: -mā ?] kulakrame [gh: kule-] ||

88. The Five Praṇavas are the instruments of mantra of the fivefold current in its numerous aspects variously outlined in these chapters. Recited in the forward order, they represent the phases of the 'wave' of emanation. Recited in the reverse order, they mark the stages of ascent into the transcendental state of repose. Cf. 62/46 and note.

89. This is another series of seven states beyond which is the eighth, supreme one (61/81). The Great King is Bhairava, the Self. His 'form' is the preceding six states. The 'supreme plane' one enters beyond is the incomparable body, which is the Bliss of Stillness (see intro. vol. 1, p. 102 ff.). It is attained by the process of 'blocking' that is, transcending the dynamic state of being of 'the Perishable (kṣara) and the Imperishable (akṣara)'. Below we are told that 'the Perishable (kṣara) is all of everything' (61/102cd). The Perishable is the 'whole of all the parts' within the Triangle represented by the energies of the letters. As the 'whole' it unites them into a unity whilst maintaining their identity and so 'joins together the letters of the Triangle' (ibid.) The Imperishable is the transcendent.

The two operate together. The former is ‘the current of the (perishable) words, seed-syllables and letters’ and the latter their imperishable counterparts.

90. I suppose the ‘three-lettered’ mantra is HA – Ṁ – SA which impels the triple motion of the breath in the three channels of Iḍā, Piṅgalā and Suṣumṇā. When these have been ‘checked’ and transcended. The dynamism of the outer breath within the sphere of immanence which obscures the inner dynamism of the activity of the ‘coming and going’ of the Supreme Energy of Kuṇḍalinī in the transcendental Void which sustains it is revealed.

91. See note 89.

92. See intro. vol. 3 p. 63, 71-2, and 76 ff. concerning the scripture of seventy million verses.

NOTES OF THE TRANSLATION OF CHAPTER SIXTY-TWO

1. The remaing five parts (prakāra) of the Krama are presented in this and the following two chapters. The Five Jewels is the subject of this chapter and the Hexad of the Knowledge, the following one. The remaining three groups are presented in chapter sixty-four.

The Five Jewels invoke the millions of Yoginīs who reside in five worlds of the sky (gagana), heaven (svarga), wind (pavana), mortals (martya), and hell (nāraka). Their mantras – 'jewels of nectar' – are referred to by the initials of these five worlds simply as Ga Sa Pa Ma Na. The Jewels invoke the protection of the billions of Yoginīs of the five worlds. The KMT (18/59-64) says of this group of mantras that:

> Vāgeśvarī (A), Māyā (I), and Mohanī (U), the third, Jñānadevī (E) and Gāyatrī (O), these are said to be the Five Jewels. Possession (by the goddess) (āveśa) takes place by just depositing (this group on the body) and by its enounciation it takes place clearly. This (possession) binds together (bandhana) the body (piṇḍa) and destroys evil mantras (siṁha) [. . .] The goddess has as her limbs the Jewels and her body is made of them. Listen to the teaching concerning the Jewels. The Jewels are said to be nectar. O beloved, the nectar is of five kinds. The body (piṇḍa) is bound together by that (group of five mantras) without that there is no life. [. . .] There is the Jewel of the nectar of the sky (gagana), the Jewel of the nectar of heaven (svarga), the Jewel of the nectar of the (world of the) wind, that of mortals (martya) and hell (nāraka). (This is the) group of Five Jewels. It is born from the goddess's body and has come out from it. Endowed with vitality (savīrya), it is the vitality of knowledge (jñānavīrya). (But) if (this group of mantras) is unknown, it destroys (the body's) vitality.

The Five Jewels are related to the five Kaula sacrificial offerings (pañcopacāra) of feces (viśvakṣāra), urine (mūtra), blood (rakta), fat (vasā) and semen (śukra). Governed by the gods of the Five Praṇavas, these are the Five Potions of Immortality (amarīdravya) (see note to 29/43 for reference from Ṭīkā MS K fl. 65a). Another group of five bodily substances are the 'substances of the Rule' (samayadravya): 1) blood 2) meat 3) bone 4) marrow taken from a skull and 5) skin. Properly propitiated, the Jewels vitalize these substances in the body. Otherwise, they depleat them in one's own body and can be induced to do so in the body of others. As the KMT (18/70cd-73) says:

> When they are known they illumine with their energizing radiance (dīpti). When unknown, they take away (that) radiance. The power of the Jewels is unparalleled and they burn with brilliant flames. O fair lady, by their power the Yoginīs are very powerful. Thus, endowed most excellently with the quality of that vitality, they hide reality (artha) and, commanded by the Lord, they protect (it) and steal away (the energy of) one who (makes use of these mantras) without being told to do so. By seeing or touching meat in association with the sections of the essence (of these mantras) (padārthapadayogataḥ), one obtains a divine body and by uttering (them), one arouses (others).

Concerning the Five Jewels, see above 24/105cd ff and 44/31 ff. See also KRU 3/42 ff. and 10/55cd-56ab. There are several versions of these mantras, as there are of the other mantras of the Krama. The ŚM supplies us with an explanation of their inner equivalents and three versions of the mantras for the three transmissions (see KuKh vol. 6 appendix 9). The Five Jewels which are part of the Transmission of the Youngest are related to five of the six Wheels of the subtle body (see ibid. table 26). The same is the case with the version of these mantras in the Krama presented in chapter 47 of the ṢSS (ibid. table 34).

A typical version of the mantras of the Five Jewels is one found in the Ṭīkā (MS Kh 48b). The format for each is the same. They begin with the Five Praṇavas followed by one of the Five Praṇavas, the name of the god in the vocative of the Praṇava, the syllable of the goddess, the invocation in the dative of an energy of Speech, and the seed-syllable of the Jewel. The Yoginī is called the Mother (ambā) who is the mistress of the millions of Yoginīs of the world of that Jewel and she is invoked in relation to the place in the body, the bodily substance, the element and the corresponding sensation to which it is related. For example, the translation of the mantra of the first Jewel reads:

AIṀ 5 AIṀ BRAHMADEVA HSKHPHREṀ (Salutations to you) the Transmental GLŪṀ I worship (your) the sandals (you who) move within the womb of the experience of the world of the Sky (gagana), the venerable mother of knowledge who is the mistress of sixty-four millions of billions of Yoginīis (you who are) the great Brahmā who is the foundation of Earth and feces (viśvakṣāra) that is deep and hidden in the anus.

The main variables in the mantras of the Five Jewels may be tabulated as follows:

9. Table of the Five Jewels

World	Syllable	God[1]	Energy	Yoginī[2]	Substance	Element	Yoginīs[3]
Gagana	GLŪṀ	Brahma	Unmanā	Vidyā	Viśvakṣāra (feces)	Earth	64
Svarga	SLŪṀ	Viṣṇu	Manonmanī	Vidyutā	Śivāmbu (wine)	Water	32
Pavana	PLŪṀ	Rudra	Samanā	Vidyunmālā	Rajorakta (mensis)	Fire	16
Martya	MLŪṀ	Īśvara	Vyāpinī	Vidyutā	Vasā (fat)	Wind	8
Nāga	NLŪṀ	Sadāśiva	Avyaktā	Śaṅkhanī	Śukra (semen)	Space	4

1) Each name is suffixed with 'deva'.
2) The name of each Yoginī begins with 'śrī'.
3) The numbers of Yoginīs are in millions of billions (lakṣasahasrakoṭi).

2. Instead of 'ocean of knowledge' YKh (1) (30/2ab) reads 'ocean of passion' (kāmārṇava). The energy within the Void of the transcendent expands out to assume first the form of the seed-syllable. This is the source of manifestation which, like a seed, contains within itself the energies of emanation represented by sacred locations (pīṭha) which, initially empty, serve as vessels of their emanations. Moving out from the centre, the implict potency of the centre becomes progressively more explicit first as the ‘qualities’ of the Triangle and then of the Hexagram. There the Krama, which is sacred sonic form of the body and the outer world, is made manifest. This is the ‘ocean of knowledge’ that contains all that can be known objectively and the means to know it. The YKh (1) calls it the ‘ocean of passion’. This reading also makes sense. The Krama is born from the will or ‘passion’ with which the opposites unite and separate. As the Krama it is actualized.

3. YKh (1) (30/2a) reads: ‘attainment of the powers of the five senses (pañcendriyaguṇāvāptiḥ)

The syllable AIṀ in the centre of the Five Jewels is the Jewel of the Mind. This is supreme, immanent and transcendental consciousness (62/30-33ab) surrounded by the Five Jewels of the senses into which it expands filling them with energy.

4. These five deities govern the Five Praṇavas, which are clearly intended here. We have already noted that they are so closely related to the Five Jewels that the Five Praṇavas are also sometimes called the Five Jewels (see 24/103cd-115 and notes). The mantras of the Kubjikā tradition are normally recited with the Five Praṇavas. This is the case with these mantras also (see below 62/94-95, 98 and note). However in addition to this, the gods who preside over them are invoked and addressed as the consorts of the Yoginīs of the Jewels and as the lords of the substances to which they correspond.

5. See above 46/14cd-15 where the names of five gestures corresponding to five sacred seats are listed. Those relating to the Five Jewels are listed below (62/90cd-91ab; cf. 62/53).

6. This line is the same as 62/28ab below. Vāgbhava is the one Great Jewel (62/103-104ab) of the Mind (62/30-33ab). AIṀ is the energy of the Command. It comes at the beginning of all the Krama mantras and so is the source of the sounds of the mantras that are generated progressively from it. It is said to be ‘the Jewel of the Jewels’ because it is the sonic energy of Kuṇḍalinī that vitalizes the Five Jewels as it does all mantras. The energy of this Jewel transforms the individual mind into the universal mind of the goddess’s consciousness. Like the Wishgranting Gem, it fulfils all the desires of the one who possesses it. In a similar way, whatever ‘intention’ arises in the mind of the deity, it is made externally manifest.

7. Above the ‘Yoga of the Tradition’ is called the Yoga of Action (62/3ab) and below the Yoga of the Moon (62/10). It is ‘the dynamic activity (calanātmākriyā) that takes place in the (one) dual nature (of Śiva and Śakti) by means of one’s own innate nature’ (66/28) and ‘the knowledge of Kula which is the Command immobile in the centre’ (see note to 66/28). This is the Yoga outlined in these verses. The word ‘tradition’ in this context has an additional technical sense apart from its literal meaning. It denotes the series of states and beings that emerge in the course of the process of emanation (see note to 63/10).

8. YKh (1) (30/9cd) reads this sentence: Thought is just delusion. Thought resides (only) in the mind

*vikalpo [k, g, gh, ṅ: vikalpa] mohanam eva [k, gh: mohenasyeta; g: mohanasyeta; ṅ: vikalpamohena * ] vikalpo [k, gh: vikalpā] manasi [k, g, gh, ṅ: manava] sthitaḥ ||

9. In other words, the outer breaths – the Moon of apāna and the Sun of prāṇa – should be stilled. In this way the lower corporeal sphere is abandoned and the Yogi enters the higher disembodied transcendental sphere. There, on the supreme plane of existence, he lives the liberated life, free of dependence on the body and the outer breath, vitalized by the inner breathing – the 'coming and going' – of the energy of consciousness in the Void of the deity's pervasive Being. Cf. above, 61/61-62ab.

10. Virtually the same line appears below as 62/23ab, see note there.

11. Diagram 24. The Lotus of Power

The Womb of the Lotus of Power
The Triple Kula
The Group of Six, The Lotus of Power
The Supreme Point, Bhairava, the Kula Tree

12. YKh (1) (30/14ab): The Supreme (goddess) (Parā) persists like space. The Sky (gagana) (where the Yoginīs reside) is the celestial water of the sky.

parā cākāśavat tiṣṭhed [gh: tiṣṭheṁ] gaganaṁ [g: haganaṅ] gaganāmbhasam |

The 'water of the Sky' is, I suppose, the water of the Ocean of Knowledge mentioned above (62/2ab) with which the Yogi is consecrated (62/25).

13. This sentence is preceded by the following in YKh (1) (30/14cd-15ab):

(The letter) Sa is within the womb of the Lotus of Power and it (spontaneously) bears of itself the form of the Mothers. (The letter) Sa is within the womb of the Lotus of Power (as is) the triple Kula which has been fixed (in its place) by the group of six (this sentence = KuKu 62/14cd).

*sa śaktipadmagarbhasthaṁ [k, gh: *śaktiṁ ca, ṅ: *śaktipadma-] svayaṁ mātaravigraham [g: māta * vigrahaṁ]* ||
*sa śaktipadmagarbhasthaṁ [ṅ: -padma * gasthaṁ] trikulaṁ ṣaṭkarodhitaṁ [k, gh, ṅ: ṣaṭka * dhṛtaṁ; g: ṣaṭkarodhita]* |

The first Jewel represents the Void of the Transmental 'without mind' that contains everything within itself as the nectar of bliss that pervades the Void. This Jewel is 'established in emission' and governs the energies of the Jewels. This is the form it assumes at the next level, which is the energy of the Equal One, 'with mind' displayed in all its aspects as the maṇḍala that emanates from it and within which it resides. This is populated by the Mothers, that is, Yoginīs over which it has authority.

14. Each Jewel in its own way includes and is the nature of the others. The first Jewel is their essential transcendental emptiness. The second Jewel is the source and potential form of the maṇḍala in which the energies of the Jewels operate. This one is the vital Wind which is their energy and vitality. As such it is the imperishable aspect that is the essential nature of the essence – 'letter' – of the Jewels within the Point arranged within it as on the petals of a Lotus. The following Jewel of the World of Mortals that extends throughout the spheres in which time operates is the same energy of all the Jewels. Inwardly, filled with its vitality, it also fills the others Jewels with it, outwardly, it is all the Mothers, that is, Yoginīs of all the Jewels. Finally, the Jewel of the netherworld of the Snakes is 'conjoined with all the energies' and so is one with them. Thus, although the Jewels are essentially one, they also mark stages along the path leading to merger in the transcendental 'supreme plane' from which they originate.

15. This and the previous sentence read in YKh (1) (30/18): Having filled all the channels (of the vital breath), the letter Ma is the fourth one. Located in the midst of the form of the letter Ma, it bears (spontaneously) of itself the form of the Mothers.

āpūrya sarvanāḍīnāṁ [ṅ: -ṇāṁ] makāraṁ ca turīyakam |
makārākāramadhyasthaṁ [k, gh, ṅ: makārokāra-] svayaṁ mātaravigraham ||

16. According to 60/31-32ab, the Knot of Brahmā is AIṀ, the first of the Five Praṇavas. It is described as Vakrikā in the form of a downward-facing triangle. See also 26/37 and 40/61-62ab.

17. Vāgbhava, at the beginning and end of each of the mantras of the Five Jewels, feeds them with its energy. Threading through them, it transports the configurations of energies, sensorial, mental and vital, that make up the individual soul along through the levels and states of the Five Jewels up to the supreme plane where it merges along with the energies it is transporting into the Voidness of transcendental consciousness. There in the Void of Pure Bliss, the individual Self divested of the energies of the 'cage of Nature' with which it was clothed, now 'naked' fuses with the bliss that pours forth from the Void and is liberated. The process is completed by the outpouring of that same bliss into the planes and states of the Five Jewels that marked the ascent. The mind, consecrated by the celestial waters of the Void (cf. note to 62/15) and satisfied by it, experiences at the immanent level the plenitude of all the states and world orders to which the Five Jewels lend access and fill with the radiant energy of the Command.

18. The mantras of the Five Jewels are presented next in code (62/21cd-24), variant forms are presented further ahead (62/40). The lines preceding and following this presentation are most conveniently read together. Thus, the lines in between are probably interpolations.

19. YKh (1) (30/21cd): A, Ku, Ṭha and Pa, Ṭa, Ha along with Ṣā, Ṭa, Ka and Pā, Ṭa, Ka.

akuṭhaḥ [k, gh: aṁkure; g: akuṭaḥ; ṅ: aṁkūṭa] paṭahaś caiva sāṭakaḥ [g: sāṭakaṁ] pāṭakas tathā ||

20. This line is missing in YKh (1) and may be spurious. Perhaps, the Lotus of the Vessel of Blood is Vāgbhava, the Great Jewel in the centre and the Luminous (viraja) Mountain of Knowledge that consists of the mantras surrounding it.

21. The Kula Tree of the goddesses here appears to be this aggregate of mantras. Virtually the same line appears above (62/14) where the Kula Tree of the goddesses appears to be the Point in the centre of the maṇḍala.

22. YKh (1) reads: nāmābhiṣecanaṁ – the consecration of the name.

23. YKh (1) reads: NARA BHĀGAVATI

24. This addition is drawn from the version in YKh (1).

25. See 62/1-2ab and 62/15 and notes.

26. See note to 62/20-21ab.

27. This line is the same as 62/5cd above. See note there.

28. YKh (1) (30/28d): The letter of the Jewel is Kaulīśa, the group of Five Jewels is Kaulīśa.

29. Cf. 62/6cd-7ab.

30. The Great Jewel is both the navel and Kuṇḍalinī who is wrapped around it. See above 3/120-121 for the references. Here it is in the 'navel' of the Triangle, the Cave of the Point as Vāgbhava, within which the sixteen vowels are distributed as described next.

31. Elsewhere Vāgbhava is said to be adorned with three 'Īs' that represent the triple outpouring (udbhava) of the Point full of bliss (59/5 and note).

32. Diagram 25. The Great Jewel with Sixteen Energies

33. YKh (1) (30/38) adds here what is verse 62/41 below.

34. We have seen that according to the KMT (18/59, see note to 62/1-2ab) the vowels corresponding to the Five Jewels are A I U E O. Perhaps the energizers mentioned in this verse are alternative versions of this series.

35. See below, 62/50-52.

36. Cf. above, 62/21cd-22ab. YKh (1) (30/41): Śā, Ṭa, Ka along with Pā. Ṭa, Ka and Śā, Ṭa. Ka and Pā and Ka. Hā, Ṭa, Ka the bliss of Pa, Ṭa, and Ha is the teaching concerning the Five Jewels.

śāṭakaḥ [g: sāṭakaḥ; gh: ṣāṭhaka] pāṭakaś caiva śāṭakaḥ [g: sāṭaka] pāṭakas tathā |
hāṭakaḥ [gh: -ka] paṭahānandaṁ [gh: -nanda] pañcaratnopadeśakam [ṅ: -ratnau-] ||

37. The Jewel is the Moon in the centre within the lunar energy of Kuṇḍalinī. This is the goddess. The Sun contained within her is the god.

38. YKh (1) (30/43ab) reads this line: The jar (kumbha) that (comes) from the jar is the Supreme Jar. The Jar of destruction is amongst (those things that are subject to) destruction and the like.

kuṁbhaṁ kuṁbhāt [g: kulakuṁbhāt] paraṁ kumbhaṁ kṣayakumbhaṁ kṣayādiṣu |

Unfortunately, the reading in YKh (1) does not help us much to understand this difficult line. The sacrificial jar is normally placed in the centre of the maṇḍala, so the 'jar' may well be the Point in the centre. The 'jar' that comes from this 'jar' may be the Void which is the Supreme Jar. Perhaps the first 'jar' is the Jar of the Moon, which together with the Jar of the Sun is one of the two breaths. These three 'jars' relate perhaps to the cycle of the inner breathing to which the following verse refers as sustatined by the 'three qualities' that line the sides of the Triangle. In the centre, Bhairava, the Self and Lord of the Jewels contemplates this inner breathing.

Below we are told that the jar is that of the image of the deity (mūrtikumbha) of the Path of Meru (65/4). The Jar contains the lineage of energies and is 'stable'. No mention is made of the Sun. But it is clear that the Jar is the iconic form of the deity which, as is commonly done, is placed in the middle of the maṇḍala. The iconic form of the goddess described above in chapter twenty-nine holds a jar with the five potions of immortality (amarīdravya) (29/43). We have seen that these are bodily substances represented by the Five Jewels (note to 62/1-2ab). Possibly this is the jar placed in the middle of the maṇḍala.

39. Presumably, this is a reference to the projection of the vowels into Vāgbhava, the Great Jewel, described above (62/33cd-36). This procedure induces the pervasion of the Five Jewels with the energy of Vāgbhava.

40. These particularly obscure lines are missing in YKh (1). As the Jewels are energies of the vital force (prāṇa), which is the essential nature of the individual soul, it is clear how they are within it. I do not understand how the 'gem of the individual soul (maṇipudgala)' is the two Jewels A and Ta. Perhaps these stand for the two breaths, lunar and solar. However, although the former can be represented as the letter A, I fail to see how Ta can represent the latter. The bliss of Vāgbhava is, I suppose, the 'Jewel of the Gems (maṇiratnaka)'.

41. YKh (1) (30/45ab) reads: The union (yoga) consisting of the Jewel of the Gems is called the Yoga of the Jewels.

maṇiratnamayo yogaḥ [k, gh, ṅ: yoga] ratnayoga udāhṛtaḥ |

Presumably the 'Jewel of the Gems' (maṇiratna) is the the Great Jewel, Vāgbhava, in the centre that unites the Jewels together like the gems on a jewel bracelet. The recitation of each mantra begins and ends with Vāgbhava, which thus not only fills the mantras with its energy, it also links them together by its 'application' (prayoga).

42. Vāgbhava is the illuminator (prakāśaka) of all the Jewels. Recited together in serial order the mantras of the Five Jewels are here understood to be a single mantra comprised in the one 'wonderfully varied Jewel'.

43. The mantras of the god and the goddess, indeed all the mantras of the Krama are most effective when uttered in reverse (62/91cd-92ab). The reverse order (viloma) of reciting mantra is the means to return to the original source of the mantra called the 'waveless plane' (61/95cd). By applying it there is 'pure bliss' (61/45cd), the bliss of Kuṇḍalinī who is 'revese action' (60/56 note to 60/43). Here the 'reverse sequence' is the ascent of awareness through the phases of the utterance of Vāgbhava from the audible sound up through its energies into the Silence which is its source and fundamental nature. Kuṇḍalinī is the energy of this reverse action (see 61/27 and note to 60/57-58ab).

44. The channel of Brahmā, the Ball of the Luminous One and the Cavity of Brahmā are all the Point, variously named according to the aspects of its functions and states. Rising up by the power of Vāgbhava (which is the 'pure aspect of Brahmā') through the phases of its energy represented by the Five Jewels, one reaches the Point which is the luminous vacuous Ball that serves as the channel to reach the transcendent plane of liberation, where Brahmā's true absolute nature is realised. This is the 'practice of celibacy mad (with passion) (unmattabrahmacaryaka)' to which the following verse refers.

45. See 62/55-56.

46. The following verses list with virtually no explanation five groups of five Voids that are, presumably, represented by five parts of each mantra of the Five Jewels. The first fivefold space is represented by Vāgbhava which stands for the Five Praṇavas. The second is the fivefold Self which is represented by the gods of the Five Praṇavas. This illumines the five energies. The five worlds of the Jewels are the fivefold space and the elements to which they refer may be the fivefold Sky.

47. This and the following verse describe the condition of merger of the Five Jewels, their energies and 'voids' as aspects of the state of oneness. Here this is said to be the fourth state of consciousness in which this state is experienced directly. In the next verse it is a described as a state of purity when the multiplicity of the movement of the breath and the channels through which it moves ceases.

48. The Five Gestures are listed below (see 62/90cd-91ab and cf. 62/4cd-5ab). They are made while uttering the mantras of the Five Jewels to arouse their energy (62/90cd-91ab).

49. YKh (1) (62/53d) reads; the group of Five Jewels is freed (mucyate).

50. MS Ṅ of YKh (1) reads: 'three cavities (randhra) of the channels' instead of 'three Jewels of the channels'. The expression 'three channels' (trināḍī) denotes the Triangle (see note to 60/35cd-36ab and 60/55). Thus one could read the expression nāḍīratnatraya- as nāḍītrayaratna- to mean the 'Jewel which is the Triangle' or, by adopting the variant reading 'the cavity which is the Triangle'. The Triangle from this perspective represents the passages through which the vital breath travels in the triadic modality in which it moves in the body. It is 'purified' by merging the three ‘channels’ and modes of the movement of the breath into the ‘one channel’ which is the energy of the goddess YKh (1) (29/80ab) refers to as ‘the supreme (form of) Māyā’ (see note to 59/75cd-76).

51. YKh (1) (30/54cd) reads: one whose mind (is engaged) in transforming (all things) into Śiva is Śiva who has become detached.

śivīkaraṇacitto [k: -ṇacinta; gh: -ṇacitaṁ; ṅ: śivākaraṇacittaṁ] yaḥ [k: teṁ; g: -cittaṁte; gh, ṅ: te] śivo [g, ṅ: nivo] niḥsaṅgataṁ [k, gh: niḥsagatāṁ; g, ṅ: niḥsaṁgatāṁ] gataḥ [k, gh: yaja; g, ṅ: yajaḥ] ||

52. The Vow is the group of Five Jewels (62/49).

53. YKh (1) (30/56ab) reads: The state (gati) of one whose mind is on the plane of bliss (sugati) in both with and without thought.

sugatipadacittasya [k, gh: sugatiṁ-; g: -padamāsādya] cintācintagatirbhavet [k, gh: citā-; ṅ: -matirbhavet] |

54. This verse and the first half of the following one correspond to YKh (1) (30/56cd-57ab) which says: Such is the teaching concerning the Jewels. It is in the Tree in the western (tradition). Having reached the western place, the modality of the Tree is the arising of the Yoni.

evaṁ ratnopadeśaṁ [k, g: ratnoṁpadeśaṁ; gh: ratnopadeśaṁ] tu [k, gh, ṅ: ca] vṛkṣe [k, gh: vṛkṣa; ṅ: vṛkṣe] tiṣṭhati paścime ||
*paścimasthānam āsādya [k, gh, ṅ: paścime vṛkṣanāthasya] vṛkṣavṛttir bhagodayam [k, g: -vṛtir-; k, gh: -bhagodakaṁ; ṅ: -bhagoda ] |

55. Diagram 26. The Tree within the Yoni

56. The Tree of Jewels is Vāgbhava that contains the Jewels of the sixteen vowels. Each of the mantras of the Five Jewels begins with Vāgbhava and so grow out of it, as it were, as do the fruits from a tree. Thus it is also the Tree of the Five Jewels. The 'top of Kailāsa' is the Point in the centre of the Triangle understood in three dimensions to be the form of a pyramid (see above, note to 58/15cd-16). The peak of the pyramid represented in that diagram is called the Root. In this context it is understood to be the top of Kailāsa. This is where Kaulīśa resides to which the variant in YKh (1) (30/66cd) refers: Kaulīśa abides thus conjoined with the Five Jewels.

*bhidyate pañcaratnena kaulīśam iti [k, gh, ṅ: kaulīyamiti; g: kaulīsami ] saṁsthitam |

57. The Liṅga of the Clan is the triangle of Vāgbhava into which the vowels have been projected. See 62/31-37 and diagram in the notes there.

58. The Transmission of Amarikā and her clan are the fifty letters. See intro. vol. 2, p. 393.

59. YKh (1) (30/68cd-69) adds: The vessel of the Five Jewels has thirty-eight energies. It is competely full of the (energy of the) group of five Gestures and is called the Vessel of the Moon where one should conjoin the letter Sa of the mind that has become full.

pañcaratnasya pātraṁ ca aṣṭatriṁśakalāyutaṁ |
mudrāpañcakasampūrṇaṁ saśipātram udāhṛtaṁ |
āpūrṇagatacittasya [k, gh, ṅ: missing] sakāraṁ [k, gh, ṅ: missing] yatra yojayet |

60. There are two forms of the Five Jewels. One is their unmanifest potential state when they are within the Point. Then they are in the 'middle of the Krama' which is projected into the six corners of the Hexagram. In their manifest form they are 'within the Krama' as the second of the six groups of mantras which comprise it. The Supreme Space is the complete realisation of the source and nature of the energy of the Command embodied in Vāgbhava.

61. See above 62/50-52.

62. YKh (1) (30/72d): 'also from the Krama of the root of Kula' (kulamūlakramād api).

63. Awareness (vicāra) is the energy of the goddess through which the configurations of its energies are deployed in the maṇḍala thereby displaying and rendering them manifest and active (see note to 59/88). The first phase is the Triangle through which issues the stream of emanation from the root transmission of the Path of Kula along which this energy flows. The second is the Hexagram in which it is fully manifest and so transmites insight and knowledge of all the aspects of the Supreme Principle in and through the Krama. This is 'the firm mark', that is, the reality one seeks to know, that has become clearly and directly intelligible, to which the following verse refers.

64. YKh (1) (30/73c): A firm mark (that is, a clearly understood object) is the location of the mind (dṛḍhalakṣaṁ manaḥsthānaṁ).

65. See above, note to 61/91 and below 62/102.

66. The Ball is the Point. Elsewhere called the Flower (see, for example 38/11), it is here called the Lotus. The Lord of Kaula is 'in the midst of Kula' (61/70), that is, the Triangle. Thus the Point which is in the centre of the Lord who is himself in the centre of the Triangle represents the inner bliss of Kula, that is, the triangular Yoni. This is the 'differentiated' aspect of bliss. It arises from the 'undifferentiated' aspect which is that of the transcendent. The two aspects of bliss develop into one another as the energy of the deity moves from the transcendent into immanence and back. The union – Yoga – of the two 'teaches', that is, imparts the experience.

67. The equivalent lines in YKh (1) (30/76cd-77ab) say: Having made the differentiated undifferentiated and the undifferentiated (such) by means of the differentiated and having taken up the plane (pada) of both (then one attains that condition that) teaches knowledge of the (one) tranquil (reality).

sakalaṁ niṣkalaṁ kṛtvā niṣkalaṁ [k, g, gh, ṅ: niḥkalaṁ] sakalena tu ||
ubhayoḥ padam uddhṛtya śāntajñānopadeśakam [k, gh: sāṁta-] |

Shifting from immanence to transcendence and back repeatedly moving with the flow of the power of consciousness that flows back and forth between these two polarities, the Yogi realises the one reality which, possessing both these aspects, does not 'move' and is tranquil (śānta), perpetually established in its own essential nature.

68. The 'Skull' is the Point (see 58/41cd-43 and 61/51-52). The Door Panel is the vital breath (30/48cd-49ab). The Point of the vital breath in the centre of the maṇḍala symbolizes the pervasion at the end – ante – of the planes of immanence and within – ante – them. It becomes 'clearly manifest' and is experienced directly by realising the 'tranqil' reality through the movement back and forth between immanence and transcendence, described in the previous verse.

Diagram 27. The Skyfarer and the Door Panel

69. The letter Kha denotes the Void – kha – of the Skull – kharpara – of the Point. The Moon that rises within it is the divine energy that pervades the Void of Deity. This is the ground of the emergence of the sonic 'form' of Śāmbhavī Śakti as the Vessel of the Five Jewels described in the following verses.

70. The two emissions (visarga) are the Sound (nāda), represented by the Half Moon, and the Point (bindu) (63/97). If the text is correct there are five letters of the Vessel of the Moon that contains the Five Jewels. They are: Kha Ma Sa Ha and Ṁ

71. Perhaps the 38 energies are of the sixteen vowels in Vāgbhava (62/33cd-37), the five vowels that serve as energizers of the Jewels (62/38), the twelve letters of the mantra (62/21cd-22ab) and the five letters of the Vessel of the Five Jewels.

72. By the letter Ma here is probably meant anusvāra, the Point which represents the mind in its most completely energized state. This is the Full Moon, which is the sixteenth digit of the Moon. This is combined with Half Moon that represents the seventeenth energy of the Moon that nourishes the sixteenth. The two combined represent the liberated state which is self-sustained, maintained by its own inner self-replenishing blissful lunar energy. Participation in this autonomous dynamism is the 'Hero's accomplishment'.

73. The Jewel Vāgbhava has come from the Triangle which is the veritable mine of the 'jewels' of the letters.

74. The letter Ṭa appears repeatedly amongst the letters that represent parts of the mantras of the Five Jewels (see 62/40) but how it operates and the nature of the 'hero's spear' are unclear to me.

YKh (1) reads: rajarājatayānapi [ṅ: -tayonapi] instead of vīraśūlaprakāśakam but makes no sense.

75. Apparently the syllable HSKHPHREṀ is meant here. If so, the five sacred seats are arranged within the finally EṀ. KHPHREṀ is formed first and then further strengthened by the addition of the letters of the two breaths. Exhalation, which here is Fire, makes the sound of the letter Ha and inhalation that of the letter Sa (see note to 13/76cd-77ab and note to 62/78).

76. The three bonds according to our text are those born of Māyā, Karma and this world (aihika). The better known triad, originally taught in the Siddhāntas, and also found in the Kubjikā Tantras, is Āṇava, Māyīya and Karma. See above 13/12 ff. and notes.

77. The *marman*s are vital points in the body. According to the ancient Indian surgeon Śuśruta, they are seats of pockets of vitality (prāṇa) in the body (Thatte 1988: 12). The *marman*s have been conceived as places in the body where pressure can be applied or even needles inserted for therapeutic purposes. The Andakal therapists of South India are an example of Ayurvedic doctors who practice this. According to Ros (1995: 12) more than 365 of these points have been found, although some are more important than others. Generally, however, traditional Ayurveda considers the *marman*s to be weak or 'lethal' points on the body. According to Vāgbhaṭa, there are one hundred and seven such pressure points (see Wujastyk 1998: 285-293). The earlier Caraka describes a simpler scheme which only mentions the parts of the body (Wujastyk 1998: 245). Wujastyk (1998: 244) explains: 'The doctrine of *marman*s, vulnerable or lethal points on the body, sits oddly with the rest of āyurvedic doctrine. It has no doubt been part of medical thinking for millennia, and yet it somehow speaks of a different milieu. It seems at first arguable that the theory of the *marman*s may have arisen first not in medicine, but in the context of India's ancient martial arts.' The reader is referred to Roçu 1981 who explores the links between the Indian martial arts and medicine. See also Fedorova 1990 for fine, clear diagrams of the locations of the *marman*s in the body.

As the energy of Kuṇḍalinī, here identified with the destructive and regenerating goddess Kālī, rises through the body, she burns up the threefold impurity (cf. 13/17 ff.) and pierces through these lethal points. Thus the mortal body is first 'killed' in order to regenerate it through the life-giving nectar of the supreme, immortal principle realised at the climax of her ascent. The rise takes place in the phase of Fire which is that of prāṇa, the upward moving breath. The climax of the upward movement leads to the expansion of pervasion of the downward movement of apāna called the Principle of Poison (viṣatattva). When the two phases are complete, the transcendent Stainless aspect of deity is realised in the centre between them and liberation is attained (see 13/76cd-77ab).

78. The Lotus is the Point in the centre of the maṇḍala (62/67). 'Poison' is the condition of pervasion of the energy that emanates from it (see appendix VI of vol. 2 of the translation). The Scissors is the seed-syllable HSKHPHREṀ (62/76-77) of the goddess. Thus the Lord of the Scissors is probably Navātman, the corresponding syllable of the god.

The 'purification' of this practice is the removal of the obstacles to its complete experience through the inner practice of the mantras. When this is achieved the yogi can eat 'what cannot be eaten', that is, the lunar nectar that drips from the Yoni generated by the lunar Point in the centre, the fettered soul is incapable of eating.

The Lotus is the Point and the Scissors, Kālī, its divine energy (cf. 18/63cd ff.). HSKHPHREṀ is an 'energized' version of KHPHREṀ, the seed-syllable of the goddess Kālī. Ha and Sa are the two breaths. Conjoined by the Point around which they rotate as they alternate, they form Haṁsa – the Gander of Unstruck Sound of the breathing in the core of reality formed by the alternation between Śiva – Ha and Śakti – Sa. Kubjikā is the energy of Haṁsa that 'precedes' and instigates it. As such she is Haṁsī and the god is Haṁsa. She is also Haṁsa – an ancient representation of the Self. Either way the prefix HASA transforms the seed-sllable of Kālī – KHPHREṀ – into that of Kubjikā. Thus the two are closely related and Kubjikā is identified with Kālī, the energy of this syllable. We may understand, although the text do not say this, that HSKHPHREṀ is the 'complete' form of the lunar goddess and so represents the Full Moon. KHPHREṀ is the 'bare' original 'transcendental' form that that feeds it with its energy as the New Moon. So Kubjikā is inwardly nourished by Kālī as they alternate from one another as do the Full and the New Moon.

79. YKh (1) (30/88ab) reads: Having fixed the condition that is free of attachment, one should then apply the cause (of liberation).

niḥsaṁgamagatiṁ [g: niḥsaṁśayagati; ṅ: niḥsaṁgavyagatiṁ] ruddhvā tadā kāraṇam ācaret |

80. The first five planes lead to the sixth which is that of the Command. This is the Transmental. Beyond mind, it is attained by conquering the mind. Beyond that is the seventh plane of liberation. Cf. 21/18, 25/19, 28, 26/75. 36/110, 57/14cd-15ab, and 61/81.

81. Instead of 'the mind is conquered' YKh (1) (30/88d) reads: 'he is considered to have issued forth (sṛto [k, gh, ṅ: sṛtau; g: śito] mataḥ)'.

82. Amarikā is the name both of the goddess and of this 'clan', that is, the aggregate of sonic energies.

83. YKh (1) (30/91b): the bliss of Karālā and the Scissors (karālānandakartarī). The Scissors is the syllable HSKHPHREṀ (62/76-77)

84. Instead of the Scissors [and] the Rosary of Meru, YKh (1) (30/92a) reads: the Lord of the Scissors and the Skull (kartarīśaṁ [k, gh, ṅ: -śa; g: -sa] kapālaṁ ca).

85. YKh (1) reads: the Ray of the Scissors (kartarīkaram). See below 62/93 ff. for the continuation of this passage as we find it in YKh (1).

The word 'kāraṇa', which literally means 'cause', has a technical sense. The 'cause' in this context is the form of the mantras and the accompanying practice, such as the making of ritual gestures when they are uttered and the drawing of maṇḍalas. This 'cause' is the cause of attainment and so denotes the practice as a whole. The perfected adept attains 'knowledge of the cause' – kāraṇajñāna. The mantras and the rest are the 'instruments' of the 'cause' (kāraṇakaraṇa), that is, the means through which the practice is fruitful.

In this verse the factors that constitute the conditions of effective action – the agent, the cause, instrument and effect – are applied to the activity of the practice of mantra. The redactor of the KuKh has changed the order of the verses in the source text to explain how this activity takes place in relation to the Five Jewels. What is here verse 62/93 follows directly from this one in YKh (1). There the cremation ground – here called Karavīra – is the 'cause' of the union that takes place in the gathering (cakramelāpa). Above (58/94) we are told that the cremation ground is the 'supreme place', the 'heart of the Yoginīs' where union takes place on the 'crossroad' (catuṣpatha). This is where the adept experiences the signs of attainment in the course of his 'nocturnal practice' (niśācāra) (54/7), that is, union with the Yoginī in the Triangle in the course of his recitation of mantra. We are reminded of the ancient practice of worshipping the maṇḍala of the Mothers (mātṛcakra) at a crossroad.

86. The equivalent lines in YKh (1) (30/59cd-60ab) are: The Māyā of the mind which is supreme nectar is the mutual coming and going (of the polarities). Having sent one another to the (supreme) abode, they are filled by one another.

parāmṛtamano [g: -mato] māyā parasparagamāgamam [gh: -maṁḥ] ||
parasparaṁ [k, g, gh, ṅ: -ra] pure [k, g, gh, ṅ: pura] preṣya [k, g, gh, ṅ: preṣyaṁ] pure [k, g, gh, ṅ: puraṁ] pūrṇaṁ [k, gh: yūyaṁ; g: yūpara; ṅ: yūpaṁ] parasparam |

87. These are the Five Jewels. See above, note to 62/1-2ab.

88. The act of 'churning' is the contemplation of the inner energy of the mantras and, especially, the Point in the centre that contains it. The outer rite, here especially, the display of the ritual gestures that accompany the recitation of the mantras of the Five Jewels, contributes to the inner work of reflection (vicāra) to 'churn', that is, arouse, the energies of the mantras to experience the planes and states of being to which they correspond.

89. YKh (1) (30/65d): the reverse is repleate (with energy) (viparītaṁ tu saṁkulam). Reciting mantras in reverse mirrors the 'reverse action' of the energy they contain and so makes them especially powerful. 'Reversed' they lead back to their original transcendental source (see note to 62/46cd) and from there nourish the universe. We have seen that the Vidyā of the New Moon is the Samayā Vidyā recited in reverse (see KuKh chapter 9, note 41).

90. YKh (1) (30/66ab): The great knowledge of the Kulakrama is the Twelve Verses.
kulakramamahājñānaṁ ślokāni dvādaśāni ye |

We have come across this mantra several times. It has two forms: one is extensive and lines the walls of the Triangle. The other is the seed-syllable HSKHPHREṀ.

91. See note to 57/28.

92. In YKh (1) this passage (KuKh 62/93-104ab = YKh (1) 30/93cd-105ab) follows after what is 62/84 above. See there for the context and note on the term 'cause' (kāraṇa) and the inner identity of the cremation ground.

We have seen that the six limbs and faces of the Vidyā of the goddess are projected into the six corners of the Hexagram where the six parts of the Krama are worshipped. Here, it seems that the six letters of her syllable HSKHPHREṀ are meant. These are projected into the corners of the Hexagram with ansvāra and its developments in the centre. There it is one with the Point associated with Vāgbhava, to which the following line refers.

93. See 62/38 for the five vowels that intensify the energy of the Jewels. The one energizer is Vāgbhava.

94. See above 62/71-72 for a presentation of the seed-syllable which is the Vessel of the Five Jewels

95. The Lotus is the Point (62/67).

96. Mudrā is the goddess and her energy is embodied in her seed-syllable (mudrākṣara).

97. The Scalpel of Knowledge is the syllable of the goddess which in this case is the single syllable Vidyā (ekākṣarī) HSKHPHREṀ

98. The 'five' are probably the Five Praṇavas that are uttered at the beginning of each Jewel and, in the reverse order, at the end. See 62/98 and note.

99. The hero's state is the Vow he observes. Here it is identified with the unitary experience of the Five Jewels which is 'the power (śakti) that has attained a state of oneness' (62/56). The term 'vīravṛtti' may also be translated as 'the modalities (of the energies of the letters governed by the) heroes' that collectively make up the one Unstruck Sound (see below 66/58).

100. YKh (1) (30/96d): In the Kula lineage (kulānvaye) . . . .

101. Concerning the five groups of five see above 62/50-52 and notes.

102. The 'hero' – vīra – is the Kaula adept who aspires to the goal he is destined to attain, that is, union with the Yoginīs. Then he becomes an accomplished and fully realised Siddha and as such unites with them (siddhayoginīmelāpa). The five Jewels praise the Yoginīs in the five regions of the worlds. Uttered correctly with all the energizers and other additions and traversing all the states and permutations of consciousness and their energies, they bring about the union of the yogi whose consciousness is identified with them. Thus the mantras are themselves the adepts – the Heroes who aspire to the full state of a Hero, that is, the accomplished condition of the Siddha. The reciter of the mantras and the mantras are both 'siddha' – 'accomplished'.

103. Mudrā is the goddess who empowers all the mantras of the Krama. Here she is called Mālinī and Vīramudrā. Above she is called Bhairavīmudrā (60/36cd-37ab) and is, as here, identified with Māyā who 'gives rise to the bliss of the Yoni' (60/41) and hence frees from bondage.

She is Mālinī, who, embodied in the Krama with its six parts (prakāra) is sixfold. Although she is the power of Māyā that deludes and binds the fettered soul, embodied in the Krama, she liberates him. She is here, as she is everywhere in the Kubjikā Tantras, the goddess Kubjikā who is 'energized', 'illumined' and made manifest (dīpitā) by her syllable, Vāgbhava.

104. The 'pair of five' are the Five Praṇavas prefixed and suffixed to the mantras of the Krama in forward and reverse order, respectively (see note to

105. The Five Jewels are a part of the Krama, which is the root of this group of mantras, as it is of the others that constitute the Krama. The Krama is thus the 'teacher' of these five mantras just as it is of the others it contains.

Above (60/38cd-39ab) we find the expression 'pīṭhakramācāra' – 'the practice of the Krama of the sacred seats'. In this case 'krama' also means 'sequence'. Thus the expression means essentially the worship of the sacred seats successively one after another. There the seats are the six projected into the Hexagram. Each seat corresponds to one of the six parts (prakāra) of the Krama that are also projected into the Hexagram, serving there as their 'containers' and sources.

106. The 'five groups of five' are outlined above in 62/50-52.

107. The two emissions are the Sound (nāda) and the Point (bindu) (63/98) of the two breaths. It is hard indeed to experience the liberating and creative flux of energies of the Kadambamaṇḍala in the centre between them.

YKh (1) inserts the following line (30/102ab): Having first known (Vāgbhava) this one instrument (of mantra) then (one can understand) the teaching concerning the letters.

karaṇaikaṁ [k, gh, ṅ: karanedaṁ; g: karaṇekaṁ] purā jñātvā tadā varṇopadeśakam |

Power is the Transmental energy of the Command that pervades and empowers the sonic energies contained in the Ocean of the Yoni of the Triangle of Vāgbhava, the 'instrument' of mantra and the body of the goddess.

108. Instead of 'silent' (tūṣṇī) here YKh (1) reads 'fire' (vahni). See above 62/66.

NOTES OF THE TRANSLATION OF CHAPTER SIXTY-THREE

1. The Hexad of Knowledge – Jñānaṣaṭka, here also called the Hexad of the Command – Ājñāṣaṭka, is also called the Hexad of Chastisement – Nigrahaṣaṭka or Grace – Nugrahaṣaṭka, depending on its application. The six Vidyās are those of the six Yoginīs – Ḍākinī, Rākinī, Lākinī, Kākinī, Śākinī and Hākinī. They are commonly referred to by the first letter of their name as the Hexad beginning with Ḍā – Ḍādiṣaṭka. They are worshipped in the Hexagram with a seventh Yoginī in the centre. She is the supreme goddess (63/23cd-4ab) who is all the six Yoginīs together and so, in a sense, is not a separate one (cf. 63/2, 63). Even so, the Tantra acknowledges her separate identity with the words: 'the six are the Kula consisting of the group of seven' (63/2). Accordingly, she is called the 'Six' – Ṣaḍi or the 'energy of the six' – Ṣaḍiśakti.

In most accounts, these Yoginīs are linked closely to the vital constituents of the body (dhātu), namely, chyle, blood, flesh, fat, bone, marrow and sperm, respectively (intro vol. 2, p. 29). They live within them in the body and draw their power and vitality from them. Acordingly, they are propitiated by offering these things to them in sacrifice. Satisfied, they protect and maintain the body healthy. Otherwise, angered and hungry they consume the vital essences of those who ignore them. Invoked in black rites (ṣaṭkarma) they consume them in the body of the enemy who has been behaved unjustly and especially one who has harmed their cult or its votaries. Worshipped in that context they are called the Fierce Group of Six (ugraṣaṭka) or Hexad of Chastisement (nigrahaṣaṭka).

Although the 'ferocity' of their power is acknowledged and are called here by the latter name (see note to 63/101), in this presentation the Yoginīs are the deities of the forces, states, energies and mantras of the maṇḍala that represents the configurations of the dynamism of consciousness in relation to Deity, the body and the world. The Yoginīs are described from this perspective, one by one, as many as four times in this chapter (63/16-23ab, 28-43ab, 62-75, and 78cd-89).

2. This line also means: 'Ṣaḍi is the seventh Vidyā. Ṣaḍi is the Kula consisting of the group of seven'.

3. The Six Yoginīs and their corresponding Vidyās and seed-syllables are projected into the six corners of the Hexagram. In the centre is the seventh. In accord with the basic principle that the container is the contained, she is the embodiment of the six who surround her. The six seed-syllables are formed simply by adding YŪṀ to the first letter of the Yoginīs' names. Thus they are: ḌYŪṀ, RYŪṀ, LYŪṀ, KYŪṀ, ŚYŪṀ and HYŪṀ. The Vidyā of the Yoginī in the centre is these six recited together. Thus in the following verse it is said to be 'a single syllable with six letters'. The Vidyā is Kuleśvarī, the mistress of her Kula and is in the Point in the centre called the City of the Moon.

4. Bhairava, the Self, is the king of the mountain of Kula (61/9 and note, 61/32). He is the Point which is the lunar orb (candrabimba). Note that according to the legend of the First Siddha, the king of Candrapura whom he converts is also called Candrabimba (see above 46/68).

5. Kuleśvarī, who governs this Kula of six goddesses emerges from the transcendental body of the god and takes up her place in the Void of the Point, which is her Cave Dwelling. She is surrounded by her six energies projected into the Hexagram, which is their 'natural plane'.

6. YKh (1) (31/5cd) reads this sentence: O Hara, she is said to be (the goddess) Girijā of the king of the Kula mountain (kulaparvatarājasya girijā [k, gh: śirijā] gaditā hara).

The corners of the Hexagram and the centre are the 'division of the sevenfold Command'. The seven Yoginīs who are the deities who embody it reside there. Some MSs read 'parvatāḥ' for 'devatāḥ'. According to this reading they are seven Kula mountains amongst which the energy of the Command is distributed. Hara, that is, Śiva / Bhairava, is the Lord of Meru, the Triangle which is the mountain in the centre of the Hexagram.

7. The Shade of Hara is the Point, which is the emanation of his power (57/43cd-44ab, 61/79 and note to 61/49cd). Like a tree, the Point and the Triangle in the centre caste a shadow. This encompassing 'shade' is represented by the Hexagram and its energies, mantras and deities. The Shade of Hara is his divine energy that pervades the maṇḍala. It is the bliss that fills it, as it does the entire sphere of manifestation (see note to 61/49cd and 61/79). The Abode of the Cave is the Void in the centre (63/49 and note). This is the original form of the entire maṇḍala, like the original image (bimba) of a reflection (pratibimba) in a mirror. In other words, the six Yoginīs and their energies in the Hexagram are essentially developments of the 'deity of the six' who is born from Hara's bliss, his transcendental body.

8. YKh (1) (31/6d) reads 'viśvasya' 'universe' for 'bimbasya' 'of the universe which is the Abode of the Cave (guhālaya)'.

9. The condition 'with seed' (sabīja) is analogous to the one 'with parts' (sakala) and the condition 'without seed' to that 'without parts'. Deity as pure unconditioned existence is transcendental Emptiness. This is its 'formless form' 'without parts'. Its aspect 'with parts' can be represented iconically both as a geometric figure and anthropomorphically. This aspect is the sonic mantra form – mūrti – of the deity. Fully differentiated, it is embodied in its mantra or Vidyā. The deity and its energy may be embodied in a series of them. The essential 'seed' of these mantras is the seed-syllable mantra. Thus the form of the deity 'with parts', differentiated into its energies, is also its condition 'with seed' – differentiated into its mantras and Vidyās.

10. See 63/85 ff.

11. See note to 57/28.

12. Words that in common usage mean ‘lineage’ (anvaya, santāna), ‘family’ (kula), ‘tradition’ (amnāya) and the like have a special technical sense in the Kubjikā Tantras (see intro. vol. 2, p. 388 ff.). Just as a lineage consists of a series of individuals linked by family ties, the series of energies that flow out of the transcendental Void into the immanence are similarly related and so denoted by the same terms. Moreover, the serial order of members of a lineage is fixed. The beings, energies, principles and other entities that emerge into the sphere of manifestation do so in a specific order. Those who seek liberation must reverse this process, step by step back along the same series to return to its original source. It is essential, therefore, to know both what has been emitted and how, as well as the sequence in which emanation takes place. Thus below we read: When one has first known the due order, it is then said to be a lineage (santāna) (65/5).

13. In the body the Seven Yoginīs, here called the the Seven Mothers (cf. below 63/65), are located in the Six Wheels (cakra) with the seventh beyond. The later Kaula traditions also regularly place these Yoginīs in the Wheels where they govern the vital constituents (dhātu) of the body.

14. The Houses are the corners of the Hexagram (note to 61/28).

15. ‘Ṣaḍidevatā’ also means the deity (called) Ṣaḍi.

16. In her transcendental, unitary aspect (niṣkalā) the goddess in the centre of all the configurations is the Nameless One. Without name she can assume many names just as the formless goddess can assume many forms that embody the bliss in the centre. See 59/15-17, 61/22 and intro. vol. 1, p. 196 and 292.

17. In other words, the Six Yoginīs are projected anticlockwise into the hexagram.

18. The ‘waters of the Void’ is the nectar of the Yoni in its creative, emissive state. Thus the energy from which the others are derived is said to be the ‘wet power’ (klinnā) (63/85)

19. The Charioteer appears in the KMT (25/1ff.) as the individual Self mounted on the chariot of Nature (prakṛti).

20. Koṅkaṇa, which is in the Deccan (dakṣiṇāpatha), is also in the ‘southern door’ (60/71cd-72). The ‘bliss of the Yoni’ is in the centre so this is, presumably, where the ‘southern door’ is located.

21. See above, note to 63/2.

22. Cf. above 63/10.

23. The utterance of the mantras of the Krama are accompanied by ritual gestures (mudrā). Thus, just as there are five gestures corresponding to the Five Jewels (see above, 62/90cd-91ab), there are seven corresponding to the seven Yoginīs.

24. The two groups of three caves are the two sets of three corners of the Hexagram. They are also called ‘houses’ (63/10 and note to 61/28). The Cave Dwelling is, as elsewhere, the Triangle in the centre here occupied by the seventh Yoginī.

25. See note to 57/28.

26. The letter E stands for the Triangle in the End of the Twelve formed from the energy Mind Beyond Mind (manonmanī) (59/35) from which emanate the three Kramas. The seven Yoginīs are arranged along the ascending series of Wheels of which the seventh is located in the End of the Twelve. Presumably then, what is to be done is to ascend up to the Triangle and then go up beyond it. Perhaps this 'breaking through the letter E' is the teaching concerning the shattering of the jar.

We have noted that restraint (nigraha) in the sense of chastisement or control of others is, along with grace (nugraha), one of the two functions of these Yoginīs. It appears from the context that here this refers to the restraint of impurities, energies, fluctuations of the mind and all else that is binding and maintaining the supreme transcendental consciousness that has been achieved.

27. This attributive compound haramadhyodarā qualifying Rākinī may also mean: 'contains (the letters La, Ka and Sa) between Ha and Ra'.

28. The mantra of each of the seven Yoginīs contains a series of seven seed-syllables formed from the initial letter of their names. For example, the seed-syllables in the mantra of Ḍākinī are the series: ḌMLVRYŪṀ ḌĀṀ ḌĪṀ ḌŪṀ ḌAIṀ ḌAUṀ ḌAḤ ḌĀKINĪ

There are seven Yoginīs and hence there are 'seven sequences' of syllables and 'seven groups of seven' syllables. The seven syllables are linked to the main vowels that are understood to be energies that radiate from the syllables. The eighth part of the mantra is formed from all forty-nine syllables together.

29. Possibly the meaning here is as follows. If the seven syllables associated with each of the seven Yoginī are treated together as one mantra which is then divided into eight parts we get six units with one syllable extra. The syllables of this Vidyā are projected onto the petals of the lotus that surrounds the Hexagram. The remaining syllable is the 'eighth part' of the eight letters. This is replaced by all the letters collectively represented by the seventh Yoginī in the centre.

30. Possibly because the seven Yoginīs are (or were originally) worshipped in a skull or a series of seven skulls, they are each identified in the following passages with a goddess of a skull who is referred to as a 'Yakṣiṇī', 'Guhyakā', 'Dūtī''Devī' and 'Mātṛ'. Collectively they constitute one 'Skull' i.e. mantra which contains all the goddesses governed by Yākinī / Yakṣiṇī (63/41cd-43ab).

31. YKh (1) (31/28b) reads kapālamudrā – which can be translated as the energy / goddess of the Skull. The other six pertain to Kula, which is manifest and differentiated, and so 'divided'. This mudrā pertains to Akula, which is unmanifest and undifferentiated, and so is one and undivided. It is the divine energy through which these, and all the mantras of the Krama, are filled with energy.

32. It appears that the seven Yoginīs represent seven aspects or levels of the Command. This, the highest level, is that of Śiva himself

33. The seed-syllable, here called the 'powerful Skull' is formed by combining all the letters of the seven Yoginīs thus: ḌRLKŚYŪṀ. The seed-syllables of each Yoginī is formed from each letter separating it from this one and then adding 'the three of the letter Ū', that is, 'YŪṀ'.

'Along with the five' = the letter Ḍ + MLVR thus making ḌMLVRYŪṀ. The five 'signs' are, I suppose, MA-LA-VA-RA-YŪṀ. When they are added to Ḍ it 'becomes sixfold'.

34. YKh (1) (31/32b) reads: kapālanarakatrayam

35. YKh (1) (31/34c): lamekala lamekaubhau

36. The Wheel of the Practice of the Rule (samayācāracakra) is presumably an alternative name for the Kramamaṇḍala. Perhaps it denotes only the Hexagram.

37. Above (61/69ab) Kālī is called Kālakaṅkālakaulikī.

38. YKh (1) (31/39cd): The deity of the Skull of the letter Ha is called Haṭṭakī.

hakāraysa kapālasya haṭṭakī [ṅ: haṭakī] nāma devatā ||

39. YKh (1) (31/41cd): The syllable of the of the Skull of the letter Ya is the form of Viraktā.

yakārasya kapālasya viraktāmūrtir akṣaram ||

Just as two groups of three 'caves' with a separate 'cave dwelling' are the seven (63/14) locations of the Yoginīs in the maṇḍala, here we have two tridents and a spear.

40. The Scalpel of Knowledge is a generic term that can refer to any major seed-syllable. It is said in a number of places to be HSKHPHREṀ (see note to 5/35-36). Vāgbhava is also referred to in this way (see 59/91 and 62/87-88ab).

41. See note to 63/30-31ab.

42. The one Vidyā consists of the aggregate of the syllables and parts of the mantras of all seven Yoginīs. She is the energy of the Goddess who creates by dividing up the one reality represented by the unity of the Vidyā. In this aspect she is called Bhedakī – the Divider. The same energy also absorbs all the other energies and, hence all that they give rise to. In this aspect she is called Grāsā – the Devouring One. The recitation of the mantras and seed-syllables of the seven Yoginīs, like all the mantras of the Krama, begins with this one seed-syllable, which is the aggregate of the others (piṇḍa). As the other seed-syllables and mantras are recited in the prescribed sequence (krama), the first one is understood to split up to form the others progressively. The series ends with the first syllable which has absorbed the others before it. Then the cycle recommences in the same way with the next repetition. Thus, this energy, which is essentially that of the Command, pervades all the 'instruments of mantra' even as it gives them the energy that makes them fruitful.

43. The caves are the six triangles at the corners of the Hexagram where the Six Yoginīs are worshipped and ultimately experienced. The Cave of the Caves is the central Triangle. See 63/6 and note.

44. YKh (1): 'by the secret light of the Cave' (guhāguhyaprakāśena).

These lines describe the expansion of the energy of the goddess as 'sevenfold bliss' (63/52cd). Bliss is the energy of the Deity (ānandaśakti) and aspects of this bliss are aspects of its energy. The experience of this bliss is knowledge of the aspects in which Deity manifests – in this case as the Seven Yoginīs.

45. 63/43cd we are told that the Skull consists of the seven goddesses.

46. The seven houses are here also called caves (63/14).

47. The Scalpel of Knowledge of the Seven consumes the seven groups of seven (63/43cd-44).

48. YKh (1) (31/52ab): The expanding plane of the group of six (*ṣaṭkasya (k, gh: * ṭkaṁ ca; g, ṅ: ṣaṭkañca) vikasatpadam*) (arises) by the expansion of awakened consciousness.

49. The aspects of this sevenfold bliss are listed in 63/50-51ab.

50. The expansion of awakened consciousness develops through the energies, states and mantras it generates and through which it operates. It unfolds in variously compounding aspects as it does so. It expands out through the spheres of the maṇḍala forming them as it does so from the Point, to the Triangle, Hexagram and beyond into the eight-petalled lotus that surrounds it. Each part in each phase replicates. Groups of four expand into four of four, those of five into five of five and so on. The members of groups grow in number. One becomes three. Three becomes four and four, five and so on by adding an extra one in the centre or direct expansion of the group. Thus, although the Tantra itself begins with the declaration that it will expound the Hexad of Knowledge, it presents seven Yoginīs (63/13) in two instances and eight in one. These are the eight Yoginīs (63/65), identified as eight energies of the current of the rays of energies that emanate from the transcendental Light that shines through the centre.

51. Ṣaḍi is the goddess as the aggregate of the six energies of the encompassing Hexagram. Ṣaḍi, the goddess of the Six Yoginīs becomes 'the fivefold energy' in order to 'unfold the Path', which is the Point and the Hexagram (63/77-78ab), and create (63/85).

52. The term 'measure' – mātrā – denotes the energy of the deity understood as Divine Sound which, like spoken words and mantric sounds is quantifiable in measures (cf. intro. vol. 1, p. 382). Here we are told that this is the energy of the measure that ‘measures out’, differentiates and defines the energies of all these mantras.

53. The expansion of consciousness is self-compounding and so is essentially the expanded, pervasive form, which is ‘six times six’, that operates for all the Krama, not just this group of mantras in it. See above 60/98-100ab and notes.

54. These and the next few lines return to the Triangle to establish that it is the same in relation to this group as it is to the others. The Vidyā in the centre is, as before, Vāgbhava ‘illumined by the sixteen vowels’ (cf. 62/32-36) who is Raudrī. The Triangle with its three ‘qualities’, that is, triads, is the same. Additions may be superimposed, but even so the basic Triangle and sonic contents remain the same as the foundation (adhiṣṭhāna) of all successive projections. This is necessarily so. The syllable of the goddess in the centre is the Yoni ‘generated from bliss’ from which all emanation proceeds, including, of course, mantras and syllables. We shall see below that in one presentation Yākinī is identified with it in the centre (63/75).

MS G of YKh (1) suggests the reading: (The goddess) Mudrā is in the midst of the six (ṣaḍimadhyasthitā [k, gh, ṅ: ghaṭa-; g: ṣaḍa-])

55. MS G of YKh (1) reads: pervasion abides in three forms (triprakārā sthitā [k, gh, ṅ: triḥprakākṣarā] vyāptir).

56. The Wheel of the Mothers is the Triangle full of the energies of the letters, here called the ‘Gestures of the Islands’. The Heroes (also called Siddhas and Bhairavas) who govern them have come forth by the Heroes’ Path of the Point. These form the Kula of Six, in the Hexagram, the Vidyā in the Point and the three Kramas in the Triangle.

57. YKh (1) (31/62b) reads this line: Bhairava's bliss within the tradition (āmnāya), within the Wheel is called ‘Mother’ (mātṛsaṁjñayā).

The goddess who is the essential nature of all the goddesses is the bliss that makes Bhairava blissful. This bliss arises from the union of Bhairava and the goddess. Thus she is ‘the peak of sexual pleasure’ and is in the middle of the Wheel of the Mothers along with Bhairava who ‘possesses’ her.

58. See note to 63/10.

59. YKh (1) (31/64b): the Circle of the Mothers is Kailāsa.

Kailāsa is the Point in the centre, where Udyāna is also located. All the mantras of the Krama are there as they are in the Hexagram. Thus the Five Jewels, for example, are also said to be ‘on the top of Kailāsa’ (62/59 and note). In this case, as in many others, ‘on top’ and ‘within’ are equivalent.

60. Cf. above, 63/10 and 63/14.

61. The previous presentations were most concerned with the mantras of the Yoginīs, this one focuses on them as phases in the ‘coming and going’ or ‘arising and falling away’ of the breath and energy of consciousness. All the phases contain in some way all the others. All the Yoginīs are the the Six Yoginīs. Dākinī, although part of the maṇḍala, is also 'sixfold'. Rākinī, Hākinī and Yākinī is established in the energy of her own letter 'and the rest'. Śākinī (here called Śāṅkarī) is the energy in the 'oneness of arising and falling' and so she is every phase of it. Lākī is the energy with 'six sheaths' – the mutually enveloping energies of the Yoginīs. Although Kākinī embodies the energy that differentiates the phases of the 'coming and going', she is the bliss of the maṇḍala, the six parts of which are the Yoginīs. However, although all the Yoginīs contain the others, the first – Khiṅkhiṇī – who is in the centre does so in a special way. Her identity is specifically that of the Yoginī who is all the others and, as such, is a separate Yoginī.

According to this presentation there are eight Yoginīs (see note to 63/52cd-53). Khiṅkhiṇī and is said to have 'six varieties', however, seven Yoginīs are described after her. Possibly, the reason for this is that Ḍākinī and Yākinī, the first and last of the group, are the same beginning and end of the perpetual recurrence of the inner breath. Khiṅkhiṇī, set in relation to the flow is Mahāmāyā, the Supreme Will that instigates it. Ḍākinī is the beginning of the cycle which starts with the self-reflection – the 'mind' which is Mind Beyond Mind – that marks the climax of the initial outpouring of the Will. This is also Yākinī who, at the end of the cycle which, with Ḍākinī it encapsulates, is 'at the end of the pervasive one', that is, the mind at the 'end' of the Will. Thus both are the Māyā of the Mind. Both are Raudrī who, threefold, is the Yoni which is both the source and the end of the cycle that flows through her.

Yākinī is the threefold Māyā who, as such, is Raudrī who consists of the 'three qualities' of the Triangle of the Yoni (63/75 ff.). Here they serve to 'block' the energy of Maya, which emerging as the Will, is prevented, as it were, from moving in the Void of the transcendent constrained in the Triangle of the Yoni which directs it into the creative dynamism of immanence.

62. YKh (1) (31/69ab): Then the power which blocks (nirodhanī) is established as Ḍa and the rest.
nirodhanī tadā śaktir ḍakārādivyavasthitā [k, gh, ṅ: śakti .okārādivya-] |

63. In other presentations of the Seven Yoginīs, Śākinī is normally the fifth, not the fourth one (see, for example, 63/13).

64. Bhedakā / Bhedakī is the one Vidyā who devours all things (63/46-48).

65. All the Yoginīs are aspects of the same energy of the Transmental that radiates its power from the Point in the centre as the vitality of the inner vital breath, sustaining phases of its 'coming and going'. Ḍākinī embodies the Will, the vital impulse that impells the outgoing flux of the breath of emanation. Hākinī marks the phase in the cycle where it commences its return. Here, at the source Hākinī is Uḍghāṭinī – She Who Unlocks – the path along which the vital energy moves to return to its place of origin. She is the same Will, the Transmental who manifests in all the phases of the Deity's inner breathing. Here, at the 'end of the vital breath' in the Void between the downward, outgoing flow and the upward, returning one, Bhairava manifests. He 'arises' and is active as the Self, the living being, whose breathing is the cycle of the phases of his energy.

66. Note that the word 'bhaga-' replaces the word 'yoni-' in each case in this verse. See note to 5/76cd-77ab.

67. Diagram 28. The Bhaga in the Yoni

68. See note to 63/100.

69. The first two series of aspects of the seven Yoginīs are those that relate to the expansion of the 'seven times seven' energies of the Vidyā who embodies the energy of the Command – Vāgbhavā – that pervades all knowledge and action. There she appears above all as the energy that consumes all others – Grāsā – the Devouring One who removes impurity and bondage and gives rise to the expansion of bliss. Here she appears in her creative aspect, Bhagā, who is generated from bliss and pervades it. The condition of threefold pervasion of the Triangle leads back to the Point. The energies are again discovered in the centre and pour out from it to regenerate the Yoni, the fivefold matrix of emission, in order to create (31/85). The flow of creative energy moves along out from the Point to form the Triangle which, at its highest level of development, reaches the Point within which is the consuming energy of the Fire that burns away the impurity of the Self and Kālī, the New Moon who, in the Cave in the centre of the Hexagram, 'reveals awakened consciousness'.

Thus the Path along which the energy of the Command develops and its phases manifest is both the Path of the Point, with respect to its source, and the Path of the Hexagram, with respect to its completion. Together they display the aspects of the liberated state with a purified and purifying centre, encompassed by its expansion.

70. Diagram 29. The Mountain of Ḍāmaryā

71. The Five Yoginīs – Rākinī and Kākinī are missing – are contained within AIṀ which is in the Point as five aspects of the energy of the Point.

The first Yoginī bursts out of the Point in the centre, just as Kubjikā comes forth out of the Liṅga and Kuṇḍalinī begins her ascent (see note to 5/65cd-6ab). The maṭha, like āśrama and pīṭha is an abode of the sacred. This one is the Point in the 'belly of the Mountain', that is, in the middle of the Triangle of the Path. She emerges from the Point in the middle of the triangle of Vāgbhava, which is her own Yoni that 'arouses the mind', that is, the pure consciousness in the centre.

72. Ḍākinī is the energy in the Point that splits it apart and Lākinī the one that differentiates its emanation 'two by two' into the polarities. These are the two Lions, male and female, the syllables of the god and goddess who emerge out the power of action of the Lion, that is, the deity represented by Vāgbhava, who is the universal cause of all things. However, even though Lākinī is the energy of duality and is duality itself, her most essential nature is free of bondage.

73. Diagram 30. Śākinī

74. YKh (1) reads Raudrī as the goddess here. Raudrī is Mahāmāyā, the supreme goddess (see below 63/86). This variant reading (perhaps the correct one?) reminds us that each Yoginī is not just one of a group, she is also the Supreme Goddess who, embodied in the Yoni, is all the Yoginīs. In this case, the process by which Raudrī / Raṇḍā, who is represented by the Triangle of Vāgbhava, becomes the Yoginī is outlined. This takes place by 'reversing' her. The downward facing triangle of Vāgbhava thus becomes the upward facing triangle (= pyramid) on the peak of which Raṇḍā / Raudrī is manifest as the 'Lion' that is, the seed-syllable – Saṁ – of Śākinī.

75. The Lotus is the Point (62/67).

76. YKh (1) (31/83ab): The letter Ha which the letter of the Doomsday Fire is that of of the process of the maturation (of Karma) that takes place in the location of Yoga.

yogasthānavipākasya [g: -vapākasya] vaḍvākṣarahakārakaṁ [k, gh: vadvā -; g: vadā-] ।

This Yoginī represents the energy of the Self, understood as the vital breath within the Point (i.e Haṁsa Bhairava). She unites the individual with the universal Self, Śiva and Śakti with the bond of the vital breath that flows between them in the Point where their union – Yoga – takes place. There the Karma of the fettered soul 'matures' and so comes to an end (see note to 13/25cd-27ab). Like the other Yoginīs, Hākinī, is essentially the energy of Vāgbhava, the 'syllable of the Command', the 'letter of the Doomsday Fire'. Thus Haṁsinī / Hākinī is the Yoni within Haṁsa Bhairava, who is the Self and the Void of the Point. At the same time, in accord with the principle that the container and the contained are reversible, Bhairava, the Self is in the Yoni of Meru. Moreover, just as he is reversed, his female energy reverses to the male Śiva, the Auspicious One even as she, like him, maintains her original, unreversed identity.

77. See note to 63/12.

78. Raudrī is the energy of the six Yoginīs (ṣaḍiśakti), the Yoni (63/8). By identifying Yākinī with her she, like the other Yoginīs, is identified with all the others as their fundamental energy and foundation.

79. The previous exposition of the Yoginīs also identifies Yākinī with Raudrī and the 'threefold Māyā' who is Bhagā, the energy of the Yoni. There her threefold nature was presented as three aspects of her pervasive being, here she is the three energies (= 'qualities') of the Yoni embodied in the goddesses Vāmā, Jyeṣṭhā and Bhañjanī. Jyeṣṭhā is Suṣumṇā, the other two are Iḍā and Piṅgalā.

80. The same energy of Māyā that deludes the ignorant when the energy of rajas dominates, elevates the fettered when she, the best of Vidyā, acts as the energy of sattva.

81. YKh (1) reads ṣaḍidevatāḥ – the six deities – as ṣaḍidevatā – the deity who is the six (see above note to 63/1, 2 and 54-55ab, cf. 63/7 and 11). The Tantra now reverts to the basic scheme of six Yoginīs and we move from the Triangle to the Hexagram in such a way that their essential identity is maintained. Raudrī is the energy of the six Yoginīs, even as she is the Yoni. In this perspective she is the sixth Yoginī and the 'measure' of all of them (cf. Note to 63/54-55ab). As the Doomsday Fire who is the seventh Yoginī, she unites with Bhairava in the centre. The yogi who recollects Bhairava as his own Self, experiences this union in the centre of his being and so, completely satisfied, no longer desires anything else.

82. The Conduct of Heroes (vīracaryā) is the union – Yoga – of Bhairava and the Yoginī.

83. It appears that the seven Yoginīs correspond to the following letters: 1) Ū 2) E 3) E and Ū 4) ? 5) Ra 6) AṀ 7) U.

84. 'The world' meant here is the World of the Hexagram mentioned above (63/77cd-78, see note to 63/100).

85. YKh (1) reads 'prakṛti-' for ākṛti-'.

86. This is the 'seventh plane' in the centre where the expansion of awakened consciousness takes place (63/51cd-52ab).

87. On the plane of the Skyfarer the liberated yogi realises his identity with the Lord of the Skyfarers who moves in the Void of his own nature. Supreme, ineffable, transcendent and immanent, the Deity is within the Void of his own nature and the Void is within Deity.

88. YKh 1) (31/95ab) reads: That energy straightens (under the influence of) the essential nature of Viṣṇu's śakti (viṣṇuśaktisvabhāvena)

89. Yākinī – the letter Ya – is located in the centre of the Triangle where the 'mind' of supreme consciousness is located. When the mind is beset by unchecked mental activity, the energy within it that fuels the development of higher states of consciousness is not 'straight'. Turned in on itself it is exhausted by supplying energy to the mind. But when the energy is penetrated by the power of the Yoginīs through their mantras and energies, the energy in the centre where Yākinī resides 'straightens' and the lower, agitated mind, is transformed into the higher Mind Beyond Mind which leads to the Transmental. The development of this higher state is attended by the signs of realisation listed in the next verse that culminate in the experience of the pervasion, that is, unity of the Deity in the liberated state.

90. YKh (1) (31/97cd): Kaulīśa is thus called the Point and Sound of the Point and emission (visarga).
kaulīśaṁ [k, gh: kauliśaṁ; g: kaulīśa] bindunādākhyaṁ tāvad binduvisargayoḥ ||

91. This obscure (and probably corrupt) verse seems to suggest that what has been said up to now concerns Śakti. Along with her is the possessor of power whose nature is consonant with that of his power. The nature of Kaulīśa, the power-holder and Self, is Śakti. She is the dynamism and he is the substance of the polarities that, united, generate the stream of emanation. She is the act of emission itself and the potency that is emitted. He is the source of power and he is empowered by it in its two forms as the Point and Sound – the two breaths that emerge from one another and return to one another. He is the Point. She is Sound. He is both of them, just as she is. He is what they are and she is how they are. He is what she is and she is how he is. Thus as her power is threefold, so is he. See 61 n.81

92. YKh (1) reads the letter Ṭa (ṭakāram). The letter Ṭa is inserted between the abbreviations standing for the individual mantras of the Jewels (see 62/21cd and chapter 2, note 54).

93. The spheres of the maṇḍala and the whole maṇḍala (59/2) are a world. Even the Void beyond and within it is in the form of a world (bhuvanākṛti) (60/83). Thus the knowledge of the planes of the mantras of the Krama within the maṇḍala are the 'bliss of the world' (bhuvanānada) which is the state of the Transmental (60/49cd). The plane of realisation (bhūmikā) is at the end of the world of the Krama beginning with the Transmental (57/57ab), the energy of which is on the plane of the 'divine world' (57/17cd-18ab). This is the world 'beyond mind' formed with the sixteen vowels projected into Vāgbhava in the centre of the maṇḍala (62/32-36). Similarly, just as the Point in the centre with Vāgbhava is a world, so is the Triangle. The Path of the Siddhas is in the Triangle which is 'in the world that has been revealed' (44/67). The same is the case with the Hexagram. The Seven Yoginīs are conjoined into the form of a world (bhuvana) (63/93ab), that is, the World of the Hexagram (ṣaṭkoṇabhuvana) (63/78ab and 66/17). This, I suppose, is the World of the Gander.

94. YKh (1) (31/101cd-102ab) concludes with this additional verse:

Such is the group of six (concerned) with restraint along with the seven and the eight. The essence of (this) knowledge has (thus) been declared along with the meaning of the Krama and the Kulakrama

NOTES OF THE TRANSLATION OF CHAPTER SIXTY-FOUR

1. The first part of this chapter deals with a group of mantras variously called the Five Pure Ones –Vimalapañcaka, the Pentad of the Pure Knowledge – Vimalajñānapañcaka and the Pentad of the Group of Yoginīs - Yoginīgaṇapañcaka. Like the Group of Six Yoginīs and the Five Jewels, it is a common component of the Kramas. All the parts of the Krama relate to the mind, senses and body (see 2/8-9ab). These five, like the previous two groups, are related to the five senses (64/14, see vol. 3, appendix 9, table 31). The components of the Krama are of three kinds, namely, sacred seats, Siddhas and, as is this group, Yoginīs. However, Campakā is the only Yoginī amongst the five mentioned in this presentation (64/44) although this group of Yoginīs is so important that Kubjinī is amongst them. See version in the ŚM (KuKh vol. 6, appendix 9, table, 22) and explanation and version in the ṢSS (ibid. table 31).

2. 'Repose' is the condition of the Point in the centre (see note to 64/15) Like the members of the other groups, each of the five members of this one is all the five and all of them are aspects of an original one which is the Supreme Soul in the Point in the centre (64/5). In this case it is the Pure One, just as the one amongst the Five Jewels is called the Great Jewel and the one amongst the Six Yoginīs, the Six.

Although the pentads are presented here very concisely, groups of five are very powerful. As we read below: wherever power resides, it is fivefold (64/52). The Tantra reiterates repeatedly that the maṇḍala, the Point, and the Triangle are fivefold, as is the energy of the Pure One. The mantras and the letters are in groups of five, as are the states that they represent, but these are mostly indicated by no more than strings of names and code words. They alternate between references to mantras, letters and seed-syllables and states and energies to which they correspond in some way. In order to understand these references it is essential to know the mantras, and even that may not be sufficient to make everything clearly intelligible. Possibly further research will reveal a key to unlock the meaning of this particularly cryptic text. In the meantime, I must ask the reader to be patient and rest content with what meaning can be grasped.

3. YKh (1) (MSs K, Gh and Ṅ): The bliss of the repose of the Pure Ones is the (experience of) merger (that takes place) in the (five) instruments (of mantra) that have been (progressively) traversed (ākrānta).

4. Here the text explains why they are called 'pure'. They possess a pure, spiritual power. Morever, they are also purifying. Their presence in the Krama worshipped in the maṇḍala purifies it.

5. The Tree has five branches and it grows in the 'garden' of the sacred seat of the Point in the centre (64/37).

6. The two categories (bheda) are power and the power-holder. In this case they are the energy of the Pure One (vimalā śakti) and the Pure One who possesses it. The former is the container – the Yoni, the maṇḍala, here called the Pure Tree. The latter is the contained – Bhairava, the Supreme Soul who is in the centre.

7. The expression 'v*idhivigraha*' literally means 'the (geometric) form for the prescribed procedure'. I have not come across this expression elsewhere. I suppose it simply means 'maṇḍala' as I have translated. More specifically the Yonis (bhaga) are the six triangles that make up the corners of the Hexagram. Each one of these is treated like the Triangle in the centre. Thus they are sometimes called 'stones', as is the the central Triangle, just as here they are called Yonis. Thus each of the six groups (prakāra) has its own triangle in the Hexagram which reproduces the Triangle in the centre in accord with its own modality.

8. The five mantras are addressed to five forms of pure knowledge (vimalajñāna), namely, Without Beginning (anādi), Omniscient (sarvajña), Siddha, Yoga and the Rule. This verse appears to be addressed to the first one of them. Here the Pure One is 'without beginning' because it is the Command which is such. Below the Stone of the Triangle is said to be 'beginningless' and the energy of the Cave of the Triangle is 'free from stain from the beginningless past (anādivimalā)'.

9. The Point represents Bhairava who is the Self that is all things and the Light that illumines manifestation and all its phases and transformations. Thus the Summit is the lunar Point.

10. Bhairava, the Self is the one who illumines all things. His Light in its undifferentiated (niṣkala), formless aspect is bliss and when primed for emanation assumes the form of the Triangle of the Transmental here called the One-footed and the one whose flag is Fire (śikhidhvaja). The Flag – Dhvaja – is the Triangle and its energy – Dhvajā – is the wave of the nectar of bliss that flows from the Triangle.

11. The Umbrella of the Snake (ahichatra) is defined above as 'the supreme nectar of the wave of bliss' (61/77).

12. In the middle of the Flag, that is, the Triangle, is the Self along with the power of the Flag who is Raudrī, Mind beyond Mind, the Transmental, the energy of the Point. She is the second aspect of the Pure One, namely, the 'Omniscient'.

13. This is the first of numerous groups of five in relation to the Pentad of the Pure Ones. This verse lists the five aspects of the Summit, that is, the Point that are like all the other Pentads of the fivefold division of the Pure One and his energy the Transmental.

14. Cf. above, 64/2. 'Repose', which is complete knowledge and consciousness, is the City of the Moon, that is, the Point (59/71cd-73). Escaping dimension in its infinite smallness and beyond time, the Point of Timelessness is the Ocean of Time and the Ocean of Time is the Point. The Point is the Mind, which fully at rest, free of thought constructs, is universal consciousness that leads beyond the lineage of the series of deities, energies and states.

15. The Bridge (setubandha) is described in SvT 4/299ff.

16. The Hexad of Knowledge is one of the names for the mantras of the group of Six Yoginīs that are the topic of the previous chapter (63/1).

17. Perhaps the Tree of Parts (padavṛkṣa) is the mantra Tadgraha or Trikhaṇḍā.

18. The seed-syllable HSKHPHREṀ is commonly called the Single Syllable Vidyā and it is indeed one of the two syllables of the goddess. However, here the 'single syllable' is probably AIṀ. The 'radiant flame' consists of the higher developments of its sound.

19. YKh (1) (32/27cd) reads: The pure (vimalā) power that arouses the worlds is located there.
tatrasthā vimalā saktirjagataḥ [g: śaktijagat] kṣobhayecca [k, gh: -yaca; g, ṅ: kṣobhayate ca] sā ||

20. See above, notes to 60/43-44 and 52 and 62/91cd-92.

21. Without knowing the Vidyā to which these verses refer it is, impossible to ascertain what the parts of the Vidyā are and what the single-syllabled Vidyā is. Up to now throughout this long section drawn from YKh (1) the seed-syllable mantra in the centre has been Vāgbhava. Here the 'one letter' is identified with the 'living being' – jīva. The life force – jīvana – is said to be within Vāgbhava (62/20-21ab). Thus, it would be quite appropriate to refer to it as 'the living being'.

We have seen that it can be analysed into five components. Possibly in this case it is written in the maṇḍala along with visarga (thus: AIṀ AḤ). Placed at the end and the beginning of mantras, it would be 'the last and the first pentad'. Perhaps it stands for the Five Praṇavas, of which it is the first.

22. Perhaps the 'five parts' are the Five Praṇavas the utterance of which is the 'practice of the Krama' (but see note to 59/88). Placed in the end (in the reverse order) of the mantra and at the beginning (in the forward order), they are to the right and the left of the mantra, just as the two breaths are on the right and left of the body. The 'practice of the right' is thus that of the 'end' – paścima. The double meaning is clear. The 'end' represents the western tradition (paścimāmnāya) of the Kubjikā Tantras and the reality to which it leads, namely, 'the abode of merger'. This is oneness, the plane of being of the liberated state that is 'hard to understand'.

23. The Krama described from chapter 59 to this one consists of six groups of mantras: 4-5-6-5-4-3. The introductory statement at the beginning of this chapter refers only to the penultimate group of five and the group of three. One wonders whether this verse is referring to the missing group of four. According to the ṢSS it consists of the four Ages, whereas according to the ŚM it comprises the four Siddhas of the sacred seats. Possibly this is the fourfold path of the Siddhas to which this verse refers as having already been explained. The seats described in the following passage appear at first sight to be the standard four. The fifth one, where Campakā resides (64/44) is poorly defined and appears to be loosely tacked on to the others. But although they may well be a later insertion into the text, the repeated evocation of pentads in relation to them and the reference to the five – not four – seats that follows (64/45) casts doubt on the possibility that they are the missing group of four.

24. See note to 60/3.

25. It seems that this verse alludes to the first sacred seat, Oḍḍiyāna, which is generally called Udyāna – the Garden – in these chapters relating to the Krama. However, what appears to be the fifth seat, which is that of the 'plane of Ciñcinī', the goddess Campakā is said to reside there in the syllable OṀ (64/44), which is normally that of the first seat.

26. The Tree is the seed syllable in the centre of the triangle of this corner of the Hexagram. This may well be, as usual, Vāgbhava. We have seen that five seats can be projected into it. 'Seats' like 'branches' are open possibilities that can accommodate the mantras or syllables as prescribed.

27. Letters and words are transformed into mantras by pronouncing them with a final nasalization represented graphically by a semi-circle and point written above the letter. This pair is called the Sound and the Point. The energies in the letter AI are activated by this addition. The experience of each energy corresponds to a sign of attainment.

28. Cf. 63/96. We have seen that signs of attainment are numerous. A group of five is commonly found as a standard set (see note to 33/47).

29. The Stone is the Triangle in the middle of the Saṁvartāmaṇḍala (See above, 3/2-4, 32-34 and note to 5/77cd-8ab). In the middle of this triangle grows the Kadamba Tree from the Point generated by the union of god and the goddess (see above 7/41cd-42ab). The cavity of the Triangle is the Cave. It is called Kadambinī because the Kadamba tree grows in front of it. This is where the Command is transmitted (see note to 1/1).

30. The energy of the downward facing Triangle, the goddess embodied in the Triangle shaped like the Sanskrit letter E, emerges from the bottom corner and descends into the world as does the goddess who in her myth is born in the Himalayas to the Himavat.

31. The previous verse tacitly identifies the goddess of the Triangle in the first seat with the first of these five mantras, that is, the Pure One Without Beginning – Anādivimala. This one refers to the identity of the goddess 'in the centre of the mountain', that is, the Triangle, with the second mantra, the Omniscient Pure One – Sarvajñavimala. The following two verses similarly imply, perhaps, the identity of the goddess with the next two mantras, namely, the Pure One of Yoga – Yogavimala and the Accomplished Pure One – Siddhavimala. According to the ṢSS (KuKh vol. 6, appendix 9, table 31), Campakā who is mentioned below (in an admittedly doubtful reading), is the Yoginī of the fourth Pure One. Perhaps an allusion to the Yoginī of the fifth mantra – the Samayavimala – is intended there by referring to her.

YKh (1) (32/42cd) reads this sentence: O god, the convention of the Tortoise is the purifier of the five seats.
kūrmasaṁketanaṁ deva pañcapīṭhaviśodhanam |

32. The letters on the two sides of the Point in the centre are normally Ha and KṢa, perhaps they have been replaced in this case with U and Ū.

33. Perhaps the Convention of the Tortoise refers to the Triangle that sustains these mantras and all other mantras of the Krama, as does the cosmic tortoise the world. See references in note to 60/2.

34. The Bhairavī of the letter of the Triangle is Vāgbhava. The letters of the alphabet in the Triangle are symbolically situated in compartments here called Siddha Liṅgas. Collectively these constitute the Void of the Triangle in which the goddess resides represented in this form.

35. The Knot of Brahmā is the First Praṇava – AIṀ (see note to 62/20-21ab). This is Vakrikā as the downward facing triangle between the Wheel of the Self-supported and the Wheel of Gems. She is, in other words, Kuṇḍalinī in the sleeping, latent state. When awakened and fully risen she enters and fills the Triangle of the upper maṇḍala in the End of the Twelve. There she is also AIṀ, the downward facing triangle within Meru. This is when the Knot of Brahmā is 'on the supreme plane of existence'. See above 7/39cd-40ab and note.

36. YKh (1) (32/45cd) reads: The goddess, established in the letter OṀ, arises in the group of five in order to accomplish (all things).
jāyate pañcake [g: pañcaka] devyā .okārasthā prasiddhaye ||

37. YKh (1) (32/46c) reads: As the bliss of the Flame (of Kuṇḍalinī) (śikhānandena).

38. These two verses outline the mantra of the 'Pentad of the five conventions' the five syllables of which are projected in some way into the Triangle of 'Kāmarūpa'. Perhaps this is the lower corner of the Hexagram below the bottom corner of the central Triangle from which it draws its name. Here, perhaps, is where the Pentad is projected. In this way it becomes the 'Stone', that is, a Triangle charged with mantra representing the goddess who here is called Śivā. The five syllables are 'conjoined with the five Stones'. These, I suppose, are the Points within (= on top) of five Vāgbhavas.

39. This 'Beauty' is the energy that 'nourishes the universe' (61/57cd-58ab). It is the energy that burns free of all impurity within the syllable (59/60). It is the 'beauty' of the Moon that adorns the letter E (59/4), the triangular body of Vāgbhava. It is, in other words the luminous radiant energy of the Point in the centre. This is the Stone where the goddess resides. Here she is called Janmanī – Birth. Embodying the energy of Vāgbhava, she divides up the five syllables between which the five Vāgbhavas are inserted. In this way the energies of the Pentad are incorporated and experienced as the one Stone whose form is the pure will – kāmarūpa, the goddess Janmanī who embodies Birth. Then, 'the generation of birth takes place' in the syllable Vāgbhava of the Triangle of Birth from which is born the universe and the liberated state of consciousness.

41. Cf. 65/2 and note.

42. The following passage, which continues up to the end of the chapter, is concerned with the three mantras of last part of the Krama. There are numerous Kramas and several versions of the mantras that constitute them. In this case also it is unfortunately not possible to be sure of the exact form of the mantras simply from what the text here tells us. Nonetheless, we may get some idea of what they may be.

43. YKh (1) (32/56-57ab) reads this sentence and inserts: The supreme mantra is (thus) consecrated (siñcyate) by the sport of Mahendra, Harendra and Khagendra. (She is) Kaulinī (the Kuṇḍalinī of) Śiva and Śakti. She is unmanifest and as manifest (energy, she is) bliss (while) Bhairava of the vital breath is called Sound.

mahendrasya harendrasya [gh: haredrasya] khagendrasya tu līlayā |
*siṁcyate [k, gh: sicyate; g: śiṣyate] paramaṁ mantraṁ kaulinī śivaśaktyayoḥ [gh: * caśaktayoḥ]* ||
avyaktā vyaktayānandā nādākhyo [k, gh, ṅ: -khyā] vāyubhairavaḥ [k, gh, ṅ: -va; g: cāmubhairavaḥ] |

44. The three letters goverened by Mahendra, Harendra and Khagendra, linked to the vowels are projected into the corners of the triangle of the Hexagram of this part (prakāra) of the Krama. The layout of the vowels is possibly the same as described above in 62/33cd-37. See diagram in note to 62/37. The following verses outline the thirteen syllables that, in three groups, are linked to them.

45. This and the following verse describe the letters and syllables that should be added to the mantra to make it effective.

46. Kula in such contexts normally denotes the Triangle. It is Bhairavī's form. Now that that has been generated with the mantras and syllables, the Point in the centre is ready to accommodate Bhairava's seed-syllable, his sonic icon (mūrti), the Lion (cf. 3/38 and, for the goddess, 3/13-14ab). This is Ḍāmara (Warlock) Bhairava who represents the state of oneness and so is that transcendental aspect of deity which is 'without parts' (niṣkala).

47. In a variant form of this part of the Krama the Triple Thorn appears to be the triple Vidyā of Parā, Parāparā and Aparā which is called 'the root with three thorns' (20/28). In the form of the Krama presented in chapter 28 we are told in relation to the three Vidyās of this part of the Krama that 'the Triple Thorn (trikaṇṭhaka) has been explained. It is the triple Vidyā that should be practiced' (28/26). Here, it seems, the mantra of the Triple Thorn is not the same. It has been replaced by the one presented above (64/61).

48. In this part of the Krama Kubjikā assumes a triadic form as the 'secret identity' of the triadic goddess (28/38) and as Mahāmāyā she is identified as usual with Prakṛti. As such she is the Yoni consisting of the three qualities of Prakṛti (64/87-88). These correspond to the three parts of the Vidyā of this unit of the Krama (cf. 28/24cd-27) and the triads associated with it. In the following verses these are presented as the three syllables (collectively called Trikūṭa) that embody the energies experienced in the corners of the Triangle. These are well known as the first three Praṇavas governed by Brahmā, Viṣṇu and Rudra, namely, AIṀ, ŚRĪṀ and HRĪṀ, respectively (but see intro. vol. 1, p. 273). We are told in this verse that the energies of the Triple Thorn and the experience to which they correspond is attained by the yogi 'by means of the three' which, presumably, are these three syllables. The goddess herself assumes the form of these syllables 'in order to accomplish the three' (64/88), that is, the Triple Thorn. In other words, the Triple Thorn is empowered by these syllables that thereby render it effective.

49. Viṣṇu and Rudra are the second and third Praṇavas, respectively.

50. The practice of the Krama (kramācāra) is essentially the movement of awareness (vicāra) within the Krama (59/88 and note). This inner awareness within the consciousness of the deity traces the geometries of the maṇḍala and moves through the planes of Being of its sacred mantras and syllables.

51. Nine triadic entities are listed in this and the following two verses.

52. The lineage is the series of energies that manifest as the nine goddesses described in the following passage who are aspects of the one constant, unchanging and undivided power embodied in Kubjikā 'the deity whose syllable is the letter Ku'. They are Kumudā, Ghorā, Aghorā, Taraṅgā, Kātyāyanī, Raktā, Kujā, Anāmā and Buddhi.

53. Kumāra represents the deity in a state of transcendental unity. See above 64/67.

54. YKh (1) (MS Ṅ): anaṅgā. Concerning Taraṅginī see notes to 2/34cd-35ab. Concerning the Ocean, see above 14/64cd-66ab and notes.

55. Above, Fame (kīrti) is identified with the goddess Bhairavī (60/20).

56. See note to 60/52.

57. YKh (1) (32/89ab): Then, by the rotation of the Mothers of Bhairava's letters who by virtue of that meditation possess unlimited radiant energy,

*bhairavākṣaramāṭṚṇāṁ [k, gh: -mādyāṇāṁ; g: -mātṛṇāṁ; ṅ: bhairavākṣaramā * ṇāṁ] taddhyānāmitatejasām* |

58. The energy of the goddess courses through the letters that ‘rotate’ as it were through her. Absorbed in pure contemplation the Mothers of the letters collect the goddess’s energy. Thus the goddess as Kuṇḍalinī manifests her power in the Triangle of the energies of the letters governed by Bhairava and his aspects, the Heroes who govern the letters, all of whom, no less than he, are Śiva. She is the triple energy – Mudrā – and the triad of the qualities of Nature – guṇa. She resides in the centre of the Ocean of the Triangle as the Point, which is her sonic iconic form as Vāgbhava, the syllable AIṀ. This syllable is uttered before each of the letters that have been converted into seed-syllables by the addition of ardhacandra and anusvāra, that is, Sound (nāda) and the Point (bindu). Repeated one after the other from beginning to end, the the Mothers of the letter of the left, that is, Vāgbhava rotate through it even as it shines in the centre between each one absorbed in the final nasalization of each syllable. A third of the way through each cycle the adept utters one of the three syllables he has drawn in the corners of the Triangle accompanied by an empowering Gesture. Just as each letter is infused in this way with the unlimited energy of the goddess similarly, all the letters also receive it collectively by virtue of the goddess’s triadic form as these three.

59. Manmatha, that is, Kāmadeva, is the Point in the centre that is split up and rubbed by the inner churning that generates bliss (58/70cd-72ab).

YKh (1) (32/97ab) reads this sentance: The Yogi is always Kāmadeva in the midst of passion (kāma) and the three categories.

*kāmadevaḥ sadā yogī kāmamadhye [k, gh, ṅ: -madhya; ṅ: kā * -] trivargagaḥ [k, gh, ṅ: trivarṇayoḥ; g: -yoḥ]* |

60. These are the energies and states within the Point, the Liṅga which is the formless aspect of the deity.

61. The five listed previously belong to the formless aspect of deity. The six energies are the potencies that manifest as the Hexagram latent in the Point. When the Point is ‘churned’ by the intent which is the intense contemplation of the deity, the Void of the Point assumes the triadic form of the Triangle of the Transmental and the consciousness of the Supreme Lord. He experiences it as the subtle contemplation which is the conception of his intent to make his energies manifest. In this way the universe of phonemic energies ‘matures’ and is formed within the expanse of Deity’s divine consciousness who contemplates its inception within it as the energy contained within the letter A.

62. YKh (1) (32/100cd): The supreme mantra is based on (the letter) A (āśrita). It is the supreme state (gati) beyond mantra.

NOTES OF THE TRANSLATION OF CHAPTER SIXTY-FIVE

1. KuKh 65/1-22 = YKh (1) 33/100-122ab. Chapter 66 of our text is most of Chapter 33 YKh (1). The last 22 verses of chapter 33 of YKh (1) appear here in the beginning of chapter 65 of the KuKh.

After the six explanatory sūtras – '*bhūmikā*s' – each dealing with one of the six components of the Sequence of Twenty-seven of the Transmission of the Youth (kaumārakrama), chapter 33 of YKh (1) comes as a conclusion. The last verses of that chapter, which are the first 22 verses of this chapter of the KuKh, explain the importance of the *bhūmikā*s ('explanations') and so aptly concludes the entire section with its six *bhūmikā*s that extends from chapter 29 to 33 of YKh (1) reproduced in chapters 59 to 66 of the KuKh. Thus the colophon at the end of Chapter 33 of YKh (1) reads: 'the description concerning the planes (of existence) in the Krama of twenty-seven divisions is complete (saptāviṁśabhedakrame bhūmikādhikāravarṇanaṁ samāptaṁ).'

2. This verse is a variant of 64/99. A 'hermitage' is the location of a sacred reality. In this case it is the Triangle that contains Kailāsa. The 'bliss of sport' is perfect rest within the Void of the consciousness of deity (64/14).

3. According to 45/35 above, liberation is attained in seven lifetimes. The goddess is reborn in her eighth rebirth (3/160-161). See intro. vol. 1, p. 127.

4. Above (64/53), this treasure chest of knowledge (jñānamañjūṣa) is called the treasure chest of mantra (mantramañjūṣaka).

5. A jar is installed in the middle of the maṇḍala within which the main deities and the Krama are worshipped. Thus it represents the Point in the centre which is called the Supreme Jar (see note to 62/42).

6. It is essential not only to know the sequence of emanation but also the location of the entities that have been emanated represented by their mantras or in other ways in the maṇḍala.

YKh (1) (33/106): Then, by virtue (of the power) of those things that exist in the east and west the Command of the south arises and the radiance of the wish-granting gem of the grace of intellect and mind (shines).

pūrvapaścimayor bhāvair dakṣiṇājñābhijāyate [g: pūvapaścimayorbhāve-; gh: -yobhārvair-; ṅ: -tijāyate] |
manabuddhiprasādasya [k, gh, ṅ: -praśādasya; g: -prāsādasya] tadā cintāmaṇidyutiḥ [k, g, gh, ṅ: -maṇī-] ||

7. YKh (1) (33/107ab): That radiance is the flow of the arising (of manifestation) (its) setting is its ultimate plane.
taddyutirudayaughaṁ [k, gh: taṁ dyutimudayodyaṁ; g: taṁ dutirmudayoghaṁ; ṅ: taṁ dyubhimunayodyaṁ] tu astastasyāntimaṁ [k, gh, ṅ: astotasyāṁtimaṁ; g: astā-] padam |

8. Cf. below 65/16.

9. The adept who observes the Vow of Knowledge and practices 'right conduct' may do so naked (14/4-5). His nakedness is here explained in the highest sense to be freedom from the ignorance and all forms of bondage that 'cloth' the fettered soul. Divested of them he is naked, just 'clothed with the directions' (digambara). It is a positive state. The liberated yogi is naked in the Void in 'union of the bliss of generation (vibhavānadayoga)' (62/25) which is itself 'naked' (66/31) as is Rudra (64/71).

10. YKh (1) (33/108ab) reads this line: The Void consists of A and the letter Ā, whereas the Lord (īśvara) is the light of the Half Moon (ardhacandrikā).
a - ākāramayākāśa īśvaraś cārdhacandrikā |

11. See above note to 26/75 and cf. 57/14cd-15ab. According to the first reference the goddess is the mistress of the seventh state beyond the six, which is the Fourth state of perfect tranquillity. The second represents the goddess as the Yoni in the Supreme Void beyond the Six Wheels. Here we go a step further, beyond the Fourth State and the Yoni onto the eighth perfectly transcendental 'imperishable plane'.

12. In some places it is said that liberation is achieved by attaining the reality at the End of Sound (YKh (2) 11/22-30 quoted in intro. vol. 1, p. 225). More commonly Sound and End of Sound beyond it are stages towards realisation (see ibid. p. 376).

13. YKh (1) (33/110cd): (In this state) the mind is pierced by the colours of the blood of one who is dead.
*mṛtaśoṇitaraṅgaiś [k, gh: -ṇitaṇai * ś; g: -raṅgaś] ca manovedhaḥ prajāyate* ||

See above 2/34cd-35ab for the Wave and concerning the Ocean see 14/64cd-65; 17/49, and cf. 66/84. This Ocean is in the End of the Twelve and one should think of it as being in one's own heart (65/65-66ab).

14. YKh (1) (33/111a): (Power) is one and is the ocean of the triad (ekā [k, gh: eta; g: ekaṁ; etat] trikārṇikā).

15. Viṣṇu is famous for the three steps he takes to cross over the three worlds. Here the sense is that the energy of the goddess moves round the triangle from corner to corner. Perhaps this association is linked to her identity as vaiṣṇavīśakti.

16. Praise' here stands for śakti.

17. YKh (1) (33/113cd): It is extracted from the realities of the planes (of Yoga) (bhūmikārtha), having know that which illumines the intellect.

uddhṛtaṁ bhūmikārthebhyo [k, gh: -kānviśvaḥ; g: -bhya; ṅ: -sva] jñātvā buddhiprakāśakam [k, ṅ: buddhiḥ-; g: prakārakaṁ; gh: vuddhiḥprakāśakaḥ] ||

18. The word sūtra may sometimes denote a single verse as it does here. All the previous chapters, that is, *bhūmikā*s, are either exactly 100 verses long or almost. These verses, up to verse 20, conclude this long section consisting of these *bhūmikā*s which are 'the current of the transmission of the (bhūmikā) of a hundred sūtras'.

19. YKh (1) (33/117); Those who are devoid of the meaning (or reality) of the planes (of Yoga) are mistaken with each step (they take). If the reciter of mantra does not possess the Command he is neither a saviour nor can he release (anybody).

bhūmikārthavihīnānāṁ [k, gh: bhūmikārthaṁvi-] teṣāṁ bhrāntiḥ [k, g, gh: śāntiḥ] pade pade |
*yadi nājñādharo [k, g, gh, ṅ: cā-] mantrī [k, gh: sa *; ṅ: * *] na [k, gh: ; g, ṅ: sa] trātā [k, gh: trāto; g: vāṁto; ṅ: bhrāto] na ca [k, gh, ṅ: naiva] mocakaḥ [k: mocaka] ||

20. Presumably, the Self that possesses the six attributes litsed above is itself sixfold.

21. Here it is quite clear that 'churning' means 'contemplation'. Once the fluctuation of the mind is brought to a halt, the Yogi concentrates intensely on the movement of the vital breath through the three channels in the subtle body, experiencing as the movement of the energy of the Transmental along the side of the triangular Yoni. If he is successful his vital breath merges into that energy and he participates in the condition of deity who has authority over all things.

22. Jālandhara is normally associated with Fire as it is here.

23. The Root is the syllable AIṀ, the supreme energy of the Yoni (see note to 59/23cd-24ab).

24. According to the ascending scheme of the Five Praṇavas outlined next, the Point and the Sound are the location of Sadāśiva, the fifth Praṇava. The Supreme Power is beyond that. In this system Śakti is higher than Śiva. From another point of view, the Point and the Sound are the two breaths. They are also the upper reaches of the seed-syllable mantra. Thus the reality beyond them is the transcendental Silence of the Void in which the vital breath has dissolved away.

25. Śiva in this case means Sadāśiva, the fifth Praṇava.

10. Table of the Five Brahmās and their Locations

The Five Brahmās	Location
Brahmā	Heart
Viṣṇu	Throat
Rudra	Palate
Īśvara	End of the Obstructress
Sadāśiva	Place of Sound above the Point in the glottis

27. Cf. 26/4a (repeated in 42/4a) and 38/8a.

28. In this case, the Six Parts are the Six Wheels.

29. See note to 68/12.

30. The Two Points represent visarga the sixteenth letter of alphabet and the last in the series of vowels. It symbolizes the sixteenth digit of the moon, that is, the Full Moon that drips inebriating nectar. Cf. 3/115cd-6ab.

31. The energy of the vital breath that moves through the nostrils is Kuṇḍalinī who is appropriately called Nāsā ('Nose') or Nāsikāśakti ('the energy of the nose'). See intro. vol. 1, p. 24.

32. Abhinava refers to a similar practice taught in the Triśirobhairavatantra, which he calls 'intellectual (i.e. abstract) contemplation' (buddhidhyāna). As in our text, the Heart in the following passage is visualized as a 'capsule' (saṁpuṭa). This is a common image for the heart; one we also find in Sanskrit literature. Lord Rāma in the Uttararāmacarita describes the turmoil of the many sentiments he feels in his heart due to Sītā's absence to be like the boiling juices (rasa) of food cooking in a sealed (= 'incapsulated') vessel. The 'sealed vessel' in our text is the 'capsule' of the calyx of a lotus. In the following passage it is the core of a banana plant enclosed by sheathes of leaves. The simile is apt. By removing the leaves one penetrates progressively into the centre where the flower of the banana plant grows. The same happens by meditating on the body. The yogi penetrates inwardly by first quiting outer things and then, progressively, the body, the senses, the mind and the intellect. Finally he attains a direct perception of the Self, which is the Supreme Reality in the very core of his Being. There, by means of the fire sticks of the breath, he generates the Fire of Kuṇḍalinī that consumes the outer duality that encloses it. We read in the Tantrāloka:

> This autonomous Light, which is consciousness consisting of all the categories of existence (tattva), abides in the Heart. The Triśirobhairava Tantra declares that: 'he who knows the truth sees this reality within the Heart, which is like a flower or the calyx of a banana plant wherein are gathered together all things both internal and external (folded into one another). There the undistracted (yogi) should contemplate the union of the Moon, Sun and Fire. The fire of the Great Bhairava aroused by (the rubbing together) of the fire sticks of meditation blazing in the great sacrificial hearth called the Heart becomes intensely inflammed. He should contemplate the three abodes, namely, subject, means and object of knowledge of the possessor of power, his energy unfolded as Bhairava's effulgence, at one (with each other and the Lord, the supreme subject). That itself is the triad of the powers of Fire, Sun and Moon as well as the Supreme (Parā), Middling (Parāparā) and Lower (Aparā) goddesses who are perpetually active (sadodita) (in every phase of the cycle of manifestation). Each one (of these three) is threefold according to whether it is in a state of creation, persistence or withdrawal. Moreover, they have a fourth nature that is unlimited and uncreated. TĀ 5/20cd-26

33. Amongst the 112 meditations (yukti) described in the Vijñānabhairava (verse 67), we find the following:

> Checking all the currents (of sensory activity) as the energy of the vital breath (prāṇaśakti) gradually moves upwards, when one feels a sensation like that of ants (crawling on the skin), supreme bliss spreads forth.

According to Kṣemarāja, this verse describes what happens in the course of the practice of breath control (prāṇāyama). By the practice of breath control, the centripedal and centrifugal movements of the breath are gradually checked and come to a halt just as water spinkled on a heated slab evaporates. To the degree in which the breath is checked in this way, the upward moving breath (udāna) rises from the root centre or heart. This movement gives rise to a subtle sensation like that of ants crawling on the skin. The yogi who carefully attends to this movement experiences a great sense of bliss gradually spreading through his body as the upward moving breath rises in the central channel of Suṣumṇā up to the End of the Twelve at the top of the head.

The Kubjikā Tantras agree that this is one possible why this subtle inner tactile sensation comes about, but they also offer others. Thus, according to the ṢSS, this sensation is felt especially at the top of the head where the Cavity of Brahmā is located. It is brought about by the subtle pressure exerted by the vital breath as it pushes its way through the top of the skull to move upwards to the extremity of the End of the Twelve (see above, note to 40/32cd-34ab quote from SvT 7/326-340ab concerning the *nāḍī*s and the movement of the vital breaths). Again, this subtle, inner sensation arises spontaneously through the action of the descent of energy (śaktipāta) that takes place in the course of initiation. The neophant merely observes this taking place within himself and experiences the attendant bliss. It is not a practice but a sign that the descent of energy is taking place (see KuKh 13/100-103 and KMT 11/95-99ab).

We may note in passing that there is a higher form of ‘touch’. It is a condition of profound contact with ultimate reality and its divine power. In the following passage from the Jayadrathayāmala, it is the Deity’s Touch of divine grace that elevates the yogi’s Kuṇḍalinī and through which he attains the knowledge of all his past lives and states of consciousness realising that throughout the One Being persists perpetually without change:

> His Touch within the energy of Kuṇḍalinī (nāsikā) transports the knower of Yoga (in the subtle body). It makes visible his condition as the lord who presides (over all the activity of the subtle body). By Touch the consciousness of what has passed is perceived as the persistence of being.

The CMSS presents this innermost experience of Touch as the special characteristic of the Western Tradition. It is the source of the bliss which is its essential nature:

O goddess (the wise) know that Western Tradition to be the tradition of (all) the traditions. It is the Crevice (kandarā) that flows with the pulsation (spanda) of the aesthetic delight of Touch of 'non-penetration' (nirāveśa). The Western House and its radiant vibration is pervaded with pure liberation. It is the great, waveless ocean free of perception (māna) and its object (meya). Deep and profound it said to be the House of Bliss (ānandagḥara).

The CMSS itself explains what 'non-penetration' means in relation to this inner 'Touch'. Here we learn that this 'Touch' is contact and merger with the Divine Current of the flow of the Transmental that takes place by 'non-penetration', that is, by entry into the disembodied energy of consciousness of emptiness :

The foundation of the body (piṇḍa), the womb of the body, the inside of the body and what has come from it. The universe pervades that body and he knows everything everywhere. They penetrate (saṁkrāmanti) one another by means of the division of the sequence of (their) movement (saṁcāra). (This is) the secret of the tradition of the Yoginīs in the oral tradition. The Wheel of Time has been split up, churned by the great churning (mahāmanthāna). The radiant energy is one's own aggregate of energies (rāśi) and the radiant pulse of Ciñciṇī's Krama. Pure, by its shining with the current of perception (mānaugha) it is penetration into the Supreme Space. One should touch the circle of the Divine Current with the essential nature of non-penetration (nirāveśa). The bliss that arises (in this way) is supreme grace.

The Touch that generates supreme grace is so exaulted that it is identified with the goddess in the Kālīmata of the JY where the god addresses her with the words:

(O goddess you who are) beyond (the reality) within the Five Voids and whose characteristic is the Touch that is pure consciousness.

One of the opening verses of the CMSS praises the goddess as the 'wealth of Touch' which is the profound most internal penetration of the Yoni, called the Wheel of Passion and the Abode of the Crevice from which flows the divine nectar of liberation in the course of the observing the Vow of the inner and outer union of Śiva and Śakti:

Salutations to the wealth of Touch (sparśalakṣmī), the supreme (goddess) who, contemplated by the Wheel of Passion (raticakra), sports (performing) the Vow which is perpetually intent on (the Yoni) the Abode of the Crevice in which time and timelessness have been eradicated. (It is the Vow) which is the manifestation of self-attainment that takes place once abandoned the abode divided by the diversity of oneness and duality. (The Vow) is the manifestation of one's own (innate) vibration (svaghūrma), (that takes place) once one has drunk the supreme and dense nectar of the juice of each state of being.

34. Kuṇḍalinī is also subtle like ‘a hundredth part of the tip of a hair’ and so can pass freely through this opening transporting within herself the individual soul:

Formless, she is Śrī and is (as subtle as) the hundredth part of the tip of a hair. She vibrates (ālolī) above the cavity of Meru and is said to be the state of bliss (sukhāvasthā). She is the primordial (goddess) (ādyā) Śukreśvarī (G: Sureśvarī) who is within beginningless Śiva. Her form is (wonderfully various like) that of a peacocks tail. She is Kaulikī who is (subtle like) the hundredth part of the tip of a hair.

35. The Supreme Plane full of waves and ripples is also commonly called the Ocean (see 65/10 etc.). This is the Ocean of the Yoni that contains the consuming Fire of the Mouth of the Mare.

NOTES OF THE TRANSLATION OF CHAPTER SIXTY-SIX

1. KuKh 66/1-90ab has been drawn from YKh (1) 33/1-99.

2. The two polarities are, presumably, Śiva and Śakti. The polarity (pakṣa) Śiva is mentioned above in 3/133 as the polarity within the Void (vyoman) in which the Vidyā (= Śakti) abides 'mounted on the Wheel of the Fourth state' which is the Yoni. Pure transcendence is beyond all polarities, including that of Śiva and Śakti. The first stage in the process of emanation or, to put it another way, the highest level of immanence, is characterized by the formation of this fundamental polarity and, as a consequence, all others. In this verse they are understood as the maṇḍala or 'Wheel', which is the deployment of the energies that are aspects of Śakti and Śiva who is the possessor of these energies and hence is the 'Lord of the Wheel'.

3. The triple polarity is represented by the sides of the Triangle. The Point in the centre where Bhairava governs the Wheel is the point of contact, the 'door' between immanence and transcendence. There, at the threshold between them, Bhairava on the one side governs the immanent domain, represented by the 'triple polarity' and on the other is established in transcendental domain beyond it. On the one side are the 'three lights' of Sun, Moon and Fire and on the other the Light of the Self beyond them that illuminates and governs them.

4. It is surprising that Bhairava is identified here with Vāgbhava, which is the syllable of the goddess. Perhaps the text is corrupt, but this is not likely as the reading here is confirmed by YKh (1). Presumably the meaning is that as he is one with the goddess he is also one with her syllable. He is the 'substance' as it were of Vāgbhava and she is his energy. Altematively, one could emend to Vāgbhavaripumardakaḥ – 'the slayer of the foes of Vāgbhava'.

5. See note to 65/2.

6. YKh (1): 'made of the energy of consciousness (cidkalāmaya)'.

7. Cf. 63/78ab, see note to 63/100.

8. The Wheel of the Directions appears to be the Triangle in which the vital breath moves (see 59/55 and note to 59/92).

9. The three Wheels are actually one Wheel and that is essentially Emptiness. It is the Wheel itself, the Void in which it is established and the Void that is within it.

10. YKh (1) reads ambaraṁ for asvaraṁ. While that reading appears at first sight to be the best, this one is supported by a reference below that says that this Wheel is called the 'Sound of Śiva', that is, Unstruck Sound (66/38).

11. YKh (1) (33/23cd) reads this sentance: Then the illuminator of the light of the Shade illumines it.

tadāsau dyotayecchāyāṁ chāyājyotiprakāśakaḥ |

The Sun and Moon are the polarities of the inner breath. When they emerge, the Shade of the energy of the goddess arises with them as the Point (57/43cd-44ab). It is 'the support (samāśraya) and place (sthāna) of liberation' (YKh (1) 34/127ab quoted in note to 66/28).

12. From here to the end of this chapter, the Tantra teaches how the main Wheels of the outer subtle body, beginning with the Wheel of the Command, are represented in the experience of the dynamism of the maṇḍala of Vāgbhava in the End of the Twelve. This is presented in terms of the characteristics of the members of the fundamental triad of Sun, Moon and Fire, their mutual relationship and dynamic interaction.

13. This is the Yoga of the Tradition (see 62/7cd-8 and note).

14. According to YKh (1) (33/28) this verse says: The rotating motion takes place by means of the essential nature of (that reality) which has a threefold nature. It is the Yoga of Action, the knowledge of Kula which is the Command immobile in the centre between the eyebrows.

kriyāyogaṁ tu kulajñānaṁ [g: -jñāna] ājñā bhrūmadhyaniścalā [k, gh: bhūmadhyaniścalaṁ; g, ṅ: -niścalam] ||

The two versions of this verse differ in a number of significant details. The reading calanā- simply means 'movement'. The variant valanā- is more specifically rotatory motion. This suggests the movement of energy around the Triangle which has a 'threefold' nature. This activity unites the energies within and on the sides and corners of the Triangle and so is the Yoga of Action – the 'union' – yoga – brought about by this activity. According to the version in our text, the 'dual nature' within which this activity takes place is probably the one reality with two polarities – Śiva and Śakti, transcendence and immanence and so on. The activity that unites the polarities as the oscillation between them that transforms them into one another as it moves from one polarity to the other. In both versions, the Command – the goddess's energy – remains 'immobile' in the centre. In both cases we may suppose that to be the Point, but in the second version we are told that it is in between the eyebrows. Either way, the Command is the Fire in the centre which represents the supreme reality within which one must stand firm. On the right and left are the Sun and Moon, the two breaths. When energy moves between them – whether all three or just two – the yogi participates in the Yoga of Action. Firmly established in the Fire of the Self in the centre in which all impurity and ignorance has been burnt away, the yogi experiences there the supreme reality. We are reminded of the goddess who is represented sitting naked in the Fire practicing austerity (see vol. 2, p. 470).

The following passage describes how the energy of the goddess swings back and forth between the two Points of the extremities of the movement of the two breaths even as she abides stable and well fixed as Kuṇḍalinī in the channel between them within Śiva. She is Kālasaṁkarṣiṇī who 'attracts time' and consumes it into the eternity of her unconditioned nature on the plane of the Nameless, where she resides. Thus she worships one Flower, that is, the dimensionless Point of her own nature as pure consciousness in 'two states of being' as the polarities:

> She is the primordial (goddess – ādyā) Śukreśvarī (G: Sureśvarī) who is within beginningless Śiva. Her form is (wonderfully various like) that of a peacock's tail. She is Kaulikī who is (subtle like) the hundredth part of the tip of a hair.
> (She is) the mother, the Command, the mistress of the Wheel of the Mothers. One should contemplate (bhāvayet) the mother of the gods, Kālasaṁkarṣaṇī with the awareness directed at itself (svalakṣagatacetasā) whose nature, as the will and in the form of the three Lineages (oli), is consciousness (cetanā). (Thus) the rays of knowledge and wisdom repose in the supreme state.
> Located in the middle of the Stick of the Cavity of Space, she is on the plane of the Nameless. Generated as Bhairava's will she, the supreme energy, pulses (swinging back and forth) (lulantī). Unsupported (she is) between the two Points, divided (vighaṭṭitā) above and below (as the two breaths). O Bhairava, (she is) the Sandal (pādukā) of the great Lord of Bliss (mahadānandanātha). There is Śrīnātha and the energy called the Sandal who the Bhairavī of Madana (the god of love). "I," (says) Kuleśvarī, "worship (the Point which is) one Flower with two states of being (bhāva)"*. (She is) the Bhairavī of the ocean of Māyā of the terrible world (ghorasaṁsāra) of suffering. Then one attains the shade (chāyā) (of the deity's feet) which is the support (samāśraya) and place (sthāna) of liberation.

*The Flower is normally the Point, which symbolizes the supreme principle. The two states of being may be the 9 couples (yugma) into which the 18 teachers of the Divine Current are divided.

15. Concerning the Five Voids see 25/38-40, cf. notes to 25/2-3ab, 40/92cd-94ab and 55/2-4ab.

16. Digambara literally means `clothed in the directions'. Another translation is ‘clothed with Voidness’. See above note to 65/7.

17. YKh (1) (33/32b): . . . then the Wheel is the Heart of the Yoginī (tadā cakraṁ yoginyā hṛdayaṁ bhavet).

18. YKh (1) (33/33ab): Then (one experiences) the bliss that has arisen from the Wheel and the supreme Void of the supreme imperishable Void (khaparākṣarakhaṁ [k, gh, ṅ: -khaḥ; g: khaharākṣarakhaḥ] param).

19. YKh (1) (33/35ab): He is the lord who is considered to be the essence of Kaula; (he is) light (prabhā) and the bliss of divine glory (vibhavānanda).

20. The ‘reverse’ sequence, action or order is, like that of the left, the one of the liberating energy of Kuṇḍalinī. Reversing its downward flow, the ‘forward sequence’ of emanation, it returns to its source, merging the lower forms, states and dynamisms into the higher until the highest activity and state is attained. See above, notes to 60/43-44, 52, 62/91cd-92 and 64/28cd-29ab.

21. The last enclosure (āvaraṇa) of the body (ghaṭasyāvaraṇāntikam) of the gods and goddesses is located there.

22. YKh (1): There (the god) is touched by the goddess. (tatra devyā ca saṁspṛṣṭo (ṅ: -tā)).

23. The Bhairava of the Point, also called the Sound of the Point (bindunāda), is said to look like a conch shell with three whirls (trivalīdara) (see above 58/35-36ab). Thus the Goddess of the Conch is Kuṇḍalinī wrapped in the three coils or ‘whirls’ of the Triangle in the Point.

24. More precisely, bhāva is the basic emotive state that gives rise to aesthetic 'taste' of sentiment – rasa.

25. The Ocean is the Supreme State enshrined in the Point of the Yoni. It is in the Heart (66/33) and is manifest in the Void (66/1). Power is the ocean of the three principles (65/11).

26. The two emissions are, I suppose, the two inner breaths symbolized by the Sun and Moon.

27. YKh (1) (33/42cd): Amā (the New Moon) whose nature is the action of the path is (the energy) of the path of the Five Principles.
tattvānāṁ pañca mārgasya amā [k, gh, ṅ: apā; g: apa] mārgakriyātmikā ||

The Five Principles are probably the Five Praṇavas. They are stages that mark the ascent of the energy of the New Moon which emerges above them as the Supreme Power (see above 65/53)

28. YKh (1): worshipped by the host of vowels (svaragaṇārcitam).

29. YKh (1): . . . and that Root is energy (tac ca mūlaṁ kalātmakam).

30. According to MSs K and Gh of YKh (1), the goddess is called Dṛśiṇī.

31. Karavīra sometimes replaces Oḍḍiyāna as the seat in the centre. The Skull is the Point which is the Full Moon. Merged within, that is, 'above' it, is the energy of the New Moon that nourishes it internally. The Full Moon is the Void of the Transmental and the New Moon is its energy merged in the transcendent. The energy called Samanā, which means both Equal One and With Mind, is the first step down into the sphere of immanence, marking the stage in which consciousness develops into Mind. Thus, it appears that the Cavity of the Void of the Full and New Moon is pierced in the downward movement of the flux of the energy of emanation.

32. Another possible translation is: separate 'above' and 'below' by (mutually) checking the coming and going (of the breath).

33. YKh (1) (33/50cd): having concentrated the mind enter the City of Unstruck Sound.

34. YKh (1) (33/52a, cd): The Shade that bears Hara's energy (haraśaktidharā chāyā) . . . It is the first (of the energies) of the limb, which is the Heart, and is called the Moon that gives repose.

35. YKh (1) (33/53ab): Located in the Wheel of Unstruck Sound, it is the supreme plane of the triple Nirvāṇa.

bhaved anāhate cakre trinirvāṇapadaṁ param |

The 'triple Nirvāṇa' may simply be a name for the triangular Vāgbhava which is described in the following verses.

36. The Triple Peak is the goddess's Triangle with its three corners or 'peaks' (see intro. vol. 1, p. 477-478). It is Vāgbhava, the seed-syllable AIṀ which is E 'conjoined with the Half Moon' the sides of which are lined with the energies of the letters. These are: A > Ḥ, Ka > Ta and Tha > Sa. See diagram in intro. vol. 1, p. 293.

37. Vāgbhava is the first of the Five Praṇavas, which are the 'instruments of mantra' (karaṇa) that correspond to the five gross elements. Thus it is the syllable of Earth, the first element.

38. As the mantric sound of the Earth element, Vāgbhava shares in its stability and, like Earth, is the foundation of the other elements and all manifestation. Although Vāgbhava is commonly described as 'earthen' (pārthiva), from a different perspective its also frequently linked with Fire. As the sonic form of Kuṇḍalinī it is called the Flame – śikhā. Vedic symbolism invests Fire with cosmogonic power, linking its indistinct sounds to that of the Veda (by the utterance of which the world is created) in its original unarticulated state. Similarly, all the potencies of Speech through which the world of words and meaning is created, are contained in the vacuous pleroma of the triangular body of Vāgbhava. The sixteen lunar vowels serve to articulate Speech and so it is in the midst of them (see 62/31-37 and diagram) and through their energies generates the world, as Fire is said to do in the Vedas. But if, instead of flowing down, the Fire of the triangle burns upwards into the lunar Point above, it melts it and the blissful lunar nectar that flows from it nourishes, as it were, the Fire and the energies of Speech within it. Thus it is 'born' and sustained 'from the unfolding flow of energies'. Thus burning away impediments and nourishing with its energy, the yogis who contemplate this Wheel of Unstruck Sound are filled with its bliss.

39. YKh (1) (33/57abc): The pure Bhairavic consciousness is the mind (citta) which is the bliss of the Lotus of the Wheel of Unstruck Sound . . .
kamalānandacittātmā vijñānaṁ śuddhabhairavam [g: śiddha-] |

40. In the centre of the Lotus of the Triangle is the Point – the calyx which is Bhairava's energy (66/53). The pure consciousness there of the bliss which is its essential nature is the divine mind (citta). This is Bhairava, the Self whose countless aspects and forms are revealed through the activity of his energy in its manifold modalities as the energies of the letters that surround him in the Triangle.

41. The yogi contemplates in the manner described in the previous verse the Void in the centre which is the Self and his essential nature as Bhairava. Thus he experiences in the centre within the Cave of the Heart, his pure transcendental blissful consciousness in the silent repose in which all outer activity has been stilled. Then he should move out from the centre expanding out through its lunar sonic energies, generating the polarities of the movement of the inner vital breath to return again when the cycle is complete. Thus the yogi delights in the bliss of rest and the blissful stream of the breath in which the sonic energies of Unstruck Sound flow.

42. YKh (1) (33/59ab) reads: dynamism (gati) is mantra, dynamism is knowledge and (all that) is to be known. (That) dynamism is supreme (parā).
gatir mantraṁ [g: -maṁtra] gatir jñānaṁ [k, gh: -jānaṁ; g: gatijñānaṁ] gatir jñeyaṁ [k, g, gh, ṅ: gati-] parā [k, gh: parāṁ] gatiḥ [g: gati] |

43. YKh (1) goes on to add a description of the dynamism of the inner breathing linked to consciousness and the virgin goddess Ratnasundarī, the beautiful Jewel of Kuṇḍalinī who is the energy of Vāgbhava. The blissful rays of her energy arise out of the 'netherworlds' through the upward movement of prāṇa. Following its movement through the unfolding expansion of consciousness to the summit, there the yogi experience the Void filled with the energies of Kuṇḍalini – the Void of Gold of Vāgbhava. This is the 'belly' of consciousness in which burns the fire that, like the gastric fire, digests the food of duality that feeds it. Here Bhairava is established in the 'fire pit' of the Point in the centre of the Triangle radiant with the energies of the letters that surround him and dissolve away into him. We have seen how the triangular Vāgbhava in the End of the Twelve is the Wheel of the Command (ājñācakra) and that of Unstruck Sound. Here we see how it is the Wheel Full of Gems (maṇipura) where Kuṇḍalinī, who is the Great Jewel (ratna), resides full of the energies of the gems of the letters.

The return (punarāvṛti) takes place by (this) movement (gati). Having known it, the reciter of mantra is purified. There (in that state), there is one most excellent Lord of Mantras and the fierce (rudra) goddess is the deity. She is called Ratneśvarī, the young virgin (kanyakā) Ratnasundarī. If the Wheel in the calyx (of the Lotus) is conjoined with Fire and the rest, the young virgin goddess bestows beautiful bliss and from the bliss that arises from the netherworlds (emerge) endless rays of bliss. Then, by the unfolding of awakened consciousness (bodha), (the yogi perceives) (the Wheel) that is beautiful with the jewel (of Kuṇḍalinī) (ratnasundara). If the Wheel of accomplished Kaula, which is the Void (ambara), is established (in the reality) without end, then the ocean (of consciousness) of the one who is well controlled is the field (of realisation of) the Lord of the Heroes. He possesses the Void (ambara) which is (Vāgbhava) the Void of Gold (kāñcanākāśa)* located in the purity of Fire and the one Bhairava of the fire pit of the many channels (of the vital breath) (nāḍī) who is the abode of passion (madanālaya). This is the burning away of all sins, that can be perceived by meditation like (the Fire) of the celestial waters of the Yoginīs that is stamped (mudrita) (with divine power). That is the one belly (jaṭhara) of the individual soul (in which all sin and duality are digested). And the belly – jaṭhara – is established in the letter Ṭha. The letter Ja is the nectar in the belly. (There) the Half Moon dissolves away and so is called the Bhairava of the fire pit (Ra). It is like the radiant energy (tejas) of the Liṅgas of the eight classes of the letters. The Fire burns in the intellect (mati) (that is, in the Wheel) Full of Gems (where) the Sun is located. The Fire of Sound arises in the middle of the Moon and the Sun (as does) the Jewel (of Kuṇḍalinī) and the individual soul (puḍgala). YKh (1) 33/59cd-68ab (* See 62/46cd-48).

44. YKh (1) (33/69): This is the Wheel filled with the gems (of the energies of the letters). Then, because the Sun and Moon of both Śiva and Śakti have dissolved away, Fire arises.

When the two breaths, solar and lunar, impelled by Śiva and Śakti, respectively, cease, the Fire of the energy of Kuṇḍalinī in the centre of the Wheel of Gems flares up.

45. YKh (1) (33/70c) reads: As Śiva's mantra is in front, then the Jewel (is experienced) in the full Wheel (pūrṇacakra).
śivamantrasya purataḥ (ṅ: -ta) pūrṇacakre maṇiṁ tadā ǀ

46. YKh (1) 'all the principles (of existence)' (sarvatattvānām).

47. The Jewels that fill this Wheel are the energies of the letters. So I suppose that the Liṅgas are the repositories of these energies. By their collective 'expansion' the energies fuse into one radiant energy (tejas) that generates Sound (nāda).

48. Instead of pūrṇacandrakam YKh (1) reads candrapūryakam which suggests that the Full Moon meant here is the City of the Moon. See note to 1/11. In the next verse we are told that Koṅkaṇa is in the Wheel of Jewels. As Candrapura is a part of Koṅkaṇa perhaps it is Kuṇḍalinī who resides in this Wheel.

49. YKh (1) (33/81a): The Lord within the Wheel of the mistress of the Wheel (īśvaraś cakreśvarīcakre) is Koṅkoṇa, which is the support (of the subtle body) (adhiṣṭhāna).

50. In other words the Wheel of the Self-supported is so called because it is the support of the goddess and it possesses its own innate authority, that is, empowerment.

51. * YKh (1) (33/82b) reads: The consciousness of purity within one's own body is there, established in the belly (tatra (k: tatraṁ) jaṭharasaṁsthitam (k, gh: jaḍara-)

52. Diagram 31. The Wheel of the Self-supported.

53. YKh (1) (33/84ab): (There is a) Wheel between the anus and the genitals that is established in the current of the Fire and Moon (agnīṣomaughasaṁsthitam).

54. See 62/77 and notes.

55. Although the Praṇavas are not normally referred to as 'aspects' or 'modalities' (prakāra), it is likely that these five are the Praṇavas and their 'female' counterparts, the Five Jewels. Perhaps the goddess who is the Command and form the Yoni (= AIṀ) is the sixth in the series which she herself embodies in such a way that she consists of six 'aspects', as she is commonly said to do.

56. See note to 6/28.

57. Diagram 32. The Wheel of Mantra

58. YKh (1) The seat (āsana) of all (true) yogis.

59. See above, note to 26/75.

60. YKh (1) (33/90cd) adds: The mass (of energies) in (the Wheel of the) Self-supported is present in the Void of the bliss of generation (udbhavānanda) and in phenomenal existence.

67. Instead of 'the great Kula of the (Wheel) of the Self-supported' YKh (1) (33/97b) reads: 'Kula is supported by that (kulam etadadhiṣṭhitam).'

68. Instead of these lines chapter 33 of YKh (1) (33/98-99) concludes:

This is the purified path of Kula and the path is sixfold. The glorious power (śrī) within the sixfold (reality) bestows (that) venerable liberation. NOTES OF THE TRANSLATION OF CHAPTER SIXTY-SEVEN

1. Kula is the Triangle, while the Root of Akula is the Point within it, full of the energy of the goddess whose sonic icon is Vāgbhava. The maṇḍala that surrounds it is formed from the mantras and goddesses, here called Mudrās, that expand out from the centre where they abide in the form of energies and planes of consciousness. Now that that has been explained in the previous chapters, this one outlines how the twenty-seven principles (tattva) that correspond to the twenty-seven mantras of the Krama exist in the Yogapīṭha.

2. Generally the word 'Yogapīṭha' denotes the maṇḍala on which the scriptures are placed and venerated. By extension the Kubjikā Tantras call the maṇḍala in the End of the Twelve Yogapīṭha (see intro. vol. 1, p. 377). In this case it denotes the Point in the centre of the Triangle which is the 'empowered (śākta) Liṅga' and the 'essential nature of all the principles'. They all exist there within Bhairava who is the Void which is the 'great abode of all the worlds'. Held together in the energy of the Void they work together to form her body (piṇḍa), the 'ball' (piṇḍa) of the Point (67/40cd-41ab, 41cd-42ab and 44cd-45ab) here called Yogapīṭha (the 'seat of union') within the three Kramas on the corners of the surrounding Triangle.

3. Reversing the usual serial order of the sequence of emanation, in this case it begins with the Earth principle which is accordingly called the seat of emanation (sṛṣṭipīṭha). This is associated with Kāmarūpa, the seat whose 'form is desire', as 'desire' is emanation.

4. The twenty-five Principles listed in the table are, as one would expect, basically divided into five groups of five. Only the last two are groups of six and four. Apart from four anomalies, which are probably errors, they correspond to sacred seats, goddesses and gods of the seats, Wheels of the subtle body and Yoginīs.

11. Table of Principles in the Yogapīṭha

Principle of Existence	Symbolic Type	Equivalent
	Sacred Seats
Earth		Kāmarūpa / Indra
Water		Purṇagiri
Fire		Jālandhara
Air		OṀ
Space		Will / Kumāra
	Goddesses of the Seats
Smell		Kāminī
Taste		Pūrṇā
Sight (subtle element of Fire)		Jvālinī

Principle of Existence	Symbolic Type	Equivalent
Sound		Oḍrā
Touch		Viṣṇu
	Gods
Speech		Śrīkaṇṭha
Hands		Mahāmati
Feet		Īśvara
Genital Organs		Rudra Nandi
Anus		Bhairava / Sadyojāta
	Wheels
Ear		Wheel of Unstruck Sound
Skin		Wheel of Full of Gems
Eye		Wheel of the Command
Tongue		Pervasive Breath
Nose		Wheel of Purity
Mind		Wheel of the Foundation
	Yoginīs
Intellect		Mātaṅginī
Ego		Pulindikā
Prakṛti		Śavarī
Puruṣa		Vijayā

5. This and the following verse describe Puruṣa. He is at once the creator of all things and the embodied form of Śiva. He assumes a body at will which he can freely modify, generate or destroy.

6. Concerning Mahantārikā as an aspect of the goddess Kubjikā, see intro. vol. 2, p. 75 ff..

7. This is the Thirty-two syllabled Vidyā, which begins with the letter Bha, and the Five Praṇavas that encapsulate it at both ends.

8. Cf. 3/46-47 where the bliss of the neuter Liṅga is described this way. See intro. vol. 1, p. 150-151 and 310 ff..

9. The same expression occurs below (see 67/35). I suppose it means that the Person, that is, the individual soul, is the repository of potential forms or the 'seeds' of future experience sown by his previous actions (karman) and the perceiving subject who experiences the world of daily life.

10. The fourfold creation – bhūtasarga – is that of the fourfold aggregate of the gross elements or four types of living beings. See above, note to 2/14.

11. Cf. 62/80 and note to 65/2.

12. Here there are 25 principles to which Śiva, followed by Kubjikā, should be added.

13. Cf. above 67/17cd-18 and note.

12. Table of the Principles in the Five Sacred Seats

Sacred Seat	Great Element	Subtle Element	Organ of Action	Organ of Knowledge	Mental Organ and the rest
Kāmarūpa	Earth	Smell	Speech	Nose	Intellect
Pūrṇagiri	Water	Taste	Anus	Ear	Nature
Jālandhara	Fire	Form	Genitals	Eye	Mind
OṀ	Air	Touch	Hands	Skin	Ego
Tisra (Candrapura)	Space	Sound*	Feet	Tongue	Person

*This is called the Great Sound and the inner Moon.

15. See note to 57/28.

16. The expression ‘piṇḍīkṛta’ can be translated in three significant and relevant ways. It literally means `made (- rolled) into a ball' also ‘made into a body’ or ‘made into a seed-syllable mantra’. The Principles in this form are the body – piṇḍa – of the goddess and the god. Moreover, they are all contained in the seed-syllable in the Point (= ‘ball’) in the centre.

17. This line appears also above as 19/6ab. See the note there concerning these four states.

NOTES OF THE SANSKRIT TEXT OF CHAPTER SIXTY-EIGHT

1. घ्, छ्: श्रीवक्रोवाच. Verses 1-24ab of this chapter correspond to YKh (1) 20/3-27ab.

2. YKh (1) क्, ख्, घ्: षट्प्रकां; ङ्: –रां. All MSs agree that all the words in this and the following line end with anusvāra. Then for some of the following lines most, if not all, read anusvāra at the end of words erratically. The MSs of YKh (1) usually reads this final anusvāra, but not always. Thus in line 68/2ab all the MSs of the KuKh agree that none of the words end in anusvāra. This is also the case in the MSs of YKh (1) except for the last word. But in the next line three of the MSs of the KuKh agree not to have anusvāra in two out of the four words liable to have it. This is the case also with the MSs of YKh (1) but only one of those two words are the same. Thus, given the irregular appearance of anusvāras in these lines and that they are not required, they have been elided.

The goddess has nine hands on the right as she does on the left. In order to reach the full compliment of nine attributes, पीठमुद्रा should be read as an irregular co-ordinative compound with a singular rather than the required dual ending. Perhaps, in order to circumvent this irregularity and clarify this obscure expression, scribes added this gloss to the text at the expense of the metre.

NOTES OF THE TRANSLATION OF CHAPTER SIXTY-EIGHT

1. This chapter begins with a passage (68/1-24ab) describing the visualized form of the goddess. It is drawn from the YKh (1) where it appears as one of a series of four *sūtra*s each dedicated to a description of a form the goddess, three for the three lineages and one undifferented (niṣkalā) form beyond. The form described here is that of the goddess of the middle lineage. See intro. vol. 2, p. 174 ff..

2. These are the colours of the goddess when she appears out of the Liṅga. See above 5/30 and notes.

3. The goddess's face is the Yoni because her sonic iconic form is the triangular syllable AIṀ. Her form is the Yoni because she is the Triangle of the energies of the Transmental that emanates from the Point in the centre that contains her 'face'. She possesses six Yonis because she is also the Hexagram that surrounds it.

4. See note to KuKh 3/45.

5. The Thirty-two syllable Samayā Vidyā is that of the goddess as the New Moon. Below in 68/18 she is also said to consist of forty-two syllables. This is the goddess as the Full Moon. The KuKh says that she 'has been encapsulated within the Yoni' (bhagodaraputīkṛtā). The version in YKh (1) (19/37cd) adds that she is 'the goddess Full Moon who is completely full and has been encapsulated by both the five' (saṁpūrṇā pūṇimā devī ubhaupañcaputīkṛtā). The Vidyā is not just 'encapsulated' by the Yoni but also by the Five Praṇavas at the beginning of it uttered in the forward order and five at the end of it uttered in the reverse order, while the Vidyā itself is uttered in reverse (see above 9/58cd-59). This is the form of the Vidyā in the centre of the Triangle (see above, 7/35-6ab and 7/47-9ab). In more essential terms YKh (2) says of the goddess in the Yoni:

> (The wise) know you (O goddess) to be the Kaulika (reality) there in the oneness of the arising and falling away (of all things). It releases a current of nectar and energizes (Vāgbhava, the goddess's) Praṇava. (She is the goddess of) the Cave of the Yoni (bhagaguhyā) who contains the Yoni present at the beginning of it and in the middle. Arising from the middle and the end of the Yoni she is Amā (the New Moon), the seventeenth energy (of the Moon). Fashioned from sixteen parts, she resides at the End of the Sixteen.

6. Trikhaṇḍā is a form of Kubjikā who embodies the Vidyā called Trikhaṇḍā. See intro. vol. 2, p. 202 ff..

7. Concerning Kubjikā's relationship to Tripurā, see intro. vol. 2, p. 216.

8. The forms of the goddess mentioned here are are: 1) Khageśvarī 2) Kālikā 3) Bhairavī 4) Trikhaṇḍā (Mālinī) 5) Tripurā 6) Barbarā. The visualized form described above in chapter 29 has six faces. Although this one appears to have just one face, that six forms are mentioned here is consonant with the goddess's sixfold nature in general. For the same reason, it seems, she is said to be mother of six times as the mother of Rudra, the Siddhas, Bhairava, heroes, yogis and sacred seats.

9. The expressions here are 'dakṣiṇamārga' and 'vāmamārga' which literally mean 'the paths on the right and the left'. This is a standard way of referring to the hands to the right and left of a deity. The attributes held in each hand or the gestures they make are listed from top to bottom.

10. Only sixteen weapons - eight on each side - are listed here although she is said to have eighteen hands. See chapter 14 for the inner equivalents of these weapons.

11. The word 'pada' can mean feet. But this is probably not the intended sense. In consonance with her eighteen hands, one would expect the goddess to have as many feet although, unlike Buddhist Tantric deities, Śaivite deities do not usually have more than one pair of feet. It appears, therefore that the other relevant meaning of 'pada' is meant here, that is, 'syllable'. Thus these five 'padas' are probably the Five Praṇavas. See above 65/53, where the Praṇavas are referred to as 'padas'.

12. Although the goddess is clearly said to be naked here, note that below in 68/17 she is described as well dressed.

13. See the note to 3/57.

14. The threefold path is that of the three main channels of the vital breath – Iḍā, Piṅgalā and Suṣumṇā. See above 14/61-62ab.

15. Also called the Sūtra of the Compendium of Liberation (Muktisaṁgrahasūtra) (68/141), the Sūtra concerning Liberation, like much else of the last chapters of the KuKh, may well have been drawn from a part of the YKh that has been lost.

16. AS reads Avvāmata.

17. AS reads: Śrīkāmikāmata.

18. The 'five causes' are probably the Five Praṇavas. If so, what is meant here is that these Tantras contain teachings concerning them and the Krama.

19. The AS (28/54cd) says in the last line of the passage from which this list of Tantras may well have been drawn: 'This sūtra has been explained beginning from the Earth principle and ending with the Equal One (dharātattvāt samanāntaṁ sūtredaṁ paribhāṣitam)'. The teachings of the sixteen Tantras mark stages along the upward ascent from the beginning of the series of metaphysical principles up to the Equal One, which is the uppermost extremity of the domain of Mahāmāyā. Beyond that is the Transmental, that is, the energy of the liberating Command from which proceeds the supreme and only truly liberating scripture. Thus several of these sixteen Tantras were listed earlier in the KuKh as ones that do not lead to this ultimate achievement in this age. The AS explains:

All those (Tantras) are (associated) with the utterance of a (Vedic syllable) (jāti). They are not part of the venerable Śāmbhava Kula. How can they be (part of) the western tradition (paścimānvaya) which is within Bhairava who is free of defects, that is, in the principle of the Command called the Transmental which is the ocean of the six-fold (ṣaṭprakāra) Mata? How can they be successful (even if) they have come through the transmission of the series (of teachers)?

jātyuccāreṇa [jātyoccāreṇa] te sarve na te śrīśāmbhave kule ||
kutas te paścimānvaye [-mavaśye] bhairavānte nirāmaye |
ājñātattve unmanākhye [-khyaṁ] ṣaṭprakāre matodadhau ||
bhavet [nayet] teṣāṁ kutaḥ siddhiḥ pāramparyakramāgatāḥ [-gataṁ] | AS 28/55cd-57ab

This statement is strange as one of the Mata Tantras listed in the AS (as in the KuKh) is the AS itself. Indeed, even the Kulālikāmata, that is, the Kubjikāmata, is amongst them. Below we are told that it is the highest scripture (68/103-105ab). One wonders how this evident contradiction can be explained without supposing that this passage was originally drawn from another Tantra belonging to a different tradition.

20. See intro. vol. 1, p. 320 ff. The Kulālikāmata, the highest of the sixteen Mata Tantras is also said to be beyond Māyā, it is free of the practice of Tantra (tantrācāra), and is identified with the Parāṣaṭka (68/120-123). The Parāṣaṭka (114cd-116ab) is the highest scripture (68/130). It may be the Vimalabhedottaraṣaṭka mentioned in the colophons of the KuKh. The 'Vimalabheda', the Pure Division', may be the MBT, the Scripture of Twenty-four Thousand Verses which is the 'pure division' of the Kubjikā Tantras. But 'uttaraṣaṭka' means 'subsequent group of six'. Here Parāṣaṭka is referred to as the 'first' or 'previous' (pūrva) group of six. The six are listed below. These appear to be aspects of the Kubjikā tradition (see note 68/114cd-116ab). It is identified with the Kulālikāmata (68/120) and the scripture consisting of twenty-four thousand verses, the Caturviṁśatisahasra, which is expressly said to be the Tantra of the 'root tradition' (68/123). The latter is a common homonym of the MBT. Indeed, it appears in the colophons. Also called, as is the KMT, the 'Śrīmata', this is the 'best of Matas' (69/27cd-28ab) just as the Kulālikāmata, as its position at the end of the list indicates, is the best of the sixteen Mata Tantras. It consists of three sections (khaṇḍa) (69/27cd-29ab) and so is also called Trikhaṇḍa (48). This, the supreme scripture is also called the Vakrikāmata (49-51ab, 143), surprisingly it is also called the Kālikākrama (78-80), perhaps because of the close relationship between Kubjikā, Vakrikā, and Kālikā, her original form.

21. See note to 4/10cd-11ab.

22. Only the Kaula Tantras can lead to the levels of realisation beyond the spheres of manifestation contained within Mahāmāyā who generates them. Below them are the Tantras of lower traditions. Concerning the distinction between Kaula and Tantric modalities, see intro. vol. 2, p. 254 ff..

23. Cf. above 7/3-4ab. See intro. vol. 1, p. 284.

24. Cf. below 68/48 and see 69/28cd-29ab.

25. The abrupt change of subject, which is taken up again a few verses later (from 46cd onwards), marks the beginning of this short sūtra (38cd-46ab). Why it has been inserted here is hard to understand. It may well be just an oversight of the final redactor who failed to clean up the text and arrange it into well-ordered topics completely.

26. Presumably the Wheel of the Command here means the Kramamaṇḍala.

27. See above, chapter 22.

28. The chalk with which the grid of letters (prastāra) is drawn is worshipped along with it as its 'foundation'. It is identified with Navātman Bhairava (8/11-13ab, cf. also 8/40cd-41).

29. The grids of letters (prastāra, gahvara) from which the letters of mantras are extracted are usually said to be sixteen. See above, note 8/2.

30. This admonition implies that the MBT teaches the Convention of the Flower, that is, the realisation of the Divine Current. Without the teachings of the MBT it cannot be known and liberation cannot be achieved. The same lines appear above as 5/46cd-47ab and 7/62cd-63.

31. The Sūtra concerning Liberation takes up from here again.

32. Trikhaṇḍa is another name for the MBT which is divided into three sections (khaṇḍa) (see above 68/37cd-8ab and below 69/29).

33. The goddess answers these questions from 68/54 onwards. Thus the following from verse 49 to 53 appears to be misplaced.

34. Here Mudrā denotes the form of the goddess that is worshipped in association wth the Krama in the Kramamaṇḍala, which is accordingly called the Mudrāmaṇḍala. It is that aspect of the goddess 'with parts' or 'differentiated energies' (sakalā). This is her 'inferior' – apara – aspect with respect to her transcendental, ‘supreme’ aspect that is not differentiated into her energies (niṣkalā). The realization of these two aspects corresponds to two types of liberation, which are described further ahead (see 68/60cd ff.)

There, in brief, the Tantra teaches that the first type of liberation, which is ‘without limit’, is provisional. It is liberation only for some with respect to their level of attainment. Thus, there are many forms and levels of this type of ‘liberation’. In fact there is no limit to them. Nonetheless, they can be broadly graded from various perspectives as the form of liberation to which the teachings of a school, tradition or scripture leads. When the votary of that tradition reaches that state he mistakenly feels satisfied that he has reached the ultimate goal due to the remaining ignorance to which he is subject. The Tantra lists the traditions and their corresponding states. At the top of the ladder are a cluster of divine forms related to the goddess Kubjikā and her Vidyā. This is the level of the Vakrikāmata, that is, the MBT which opens out beyond it. Here, in the sphere of the Transmental, the goddess is ‘with parts’. Beyond is the supreme, ultimate form of liberation where she is perfect, transcendental emptiness ‘without parts’. This supreme form of liberation is ‘with limit’ because here the aspirant has not just come to the end of the Path (which he did when he attained the Transmental), he has gone beyond it and dissolved away, as it were, into the Void where he lives eternally as a Skyfarer. Thus it is the ‘limit’ in the sense of ultimate culmination. There is no further to go. It is truly the end. This is because he has transcended the sphere of form, views, principles, grades, meditation (85cd-86), states and signs of attainment (87cd-89). These have no limit. They never end. There is always some higher state beyond. But once the Supreme Emptiness, which has no form and is free of gradations, has been attained one has truly come to the end; one has reached the supreme summit (parā kāṣṭhā) and Ultimate Limit, the Absolute End (avadhi). This is the Void beyond ritual and mantra (85cd-86ab, 95). It is at the ‘end of the Krama within the Void’ (68/97-98ab). It is attained by abandoning mantra and all other practices (68/140). Indeed, even though one can only know what true liberation is from the highest scriptures (68/141), it is beyond scripture and its injunctions (68/98cd-99) and all that needs to be taken up or abandoned (68/69-70ab). It is the perfectly tranquil state (śānta) totally free, not just of desire but also transcends the will to existence. Its tranquil, stability is the mark of the absolute finality of the eternally liberated state which is absolutely fufiling and from which there is no possibility of falling.

This is the Śāmbhava plane, the ‘extremity of the supreme (level of existence)’ (parānta) (68/71). It is free of outer supports and practice of any sort (68/69). The adept dissolves away at the extremity of the Supreme (68/102) in the goddess’s tradition and is never reborn again. Thus, just as the Śāmbahva plane is said to be located at the ‘extremity of the supreme’ (parānta) it is also said to be at the extremity of the goddess Kujā (kujānta) (68/81 and 94). Supremely transcendent, ultimate liberation is beyond all things even the Goddess and so nothing can be ‘accumulated’. It is the Śāmbhava plane (cf. below 68/70cd-71, 93cd-94) which is that of the liberated state (see intro. vol. 1, p. 51, 207, 393-394 and 436 ff.).

35. See intro. vol. 2 p. 341. According to YKh (1) (4/193) Buddhism's sphere of authority is the principle of the intellect (buddhitattvādhikāre ca bauddhe).

36. Now the goddess has explained why the other traditions are inferior, she goes on to describe the liberation taught in the MBT (Trikhaṇḍa) and in the Kālikākrama.

37. The impure Self is the fettered soul (68/22). The pure one is free of desire and attachment (57/101cd-102ab).

39. A line or two of the text is apparently missing in which the ninth and tenth degree of liberation are listed.

40. The abode of the Forty-two syllable Vidyā is in the middle of the Triangle (7/47-9ab) where the goddess is contemplated in this, her full iconic form (68/18).

41. The levels beyond the Equal One are states within the developing energy of the Command the goddess embodies. Accordingly, the first and second degrees of that (corresponding to the eleventh and twelfth Voids) are experienced as Klinnā and Trikhaṇḍā, who are both aspects of the goddess (see intro. vol. 2, p. 202 ff. and 226 ff.). The Forty-two syllable Vidyā represents the goddess in her form as the Full Moon. This is her aspect 'with parts' that can be contemplated in iconic form. This is the form of the formless Command, the Transmental (68/18). It stands at the threshold between the levels of Voidness and states that are forms of liberation 'without limit' and the supreme Void which is the aspect of the goddess'without parts' (niṣkalā) and is the ultimate form of liberation that is 'with limit'. This is the sixteenth energy of the New Moon, which is within the Full Moon, just as the formless Self is within the body. It is represented by the Vidyā of Six Letters which is, presumably, the syllable HSKHPHREṀ. Here the goddess is Parā, and as such is called Kujā. Beyond her, at the 'end of Kujā' (kujānata) (68/81), that is, at the end of Parā (parānta) is the Void, corresponding to the seventeenth energy (at the 'end of the sixteen') in which even this aspect dissolves away and the ultimate state of liberation is attained (cf. intro. vol. 1, p. 376 ff.). In this way both liberated states are achieved correspond to the two aspects of deity – one 'with parts' (sakalā) and the other 'without parts' (niṣkalā). The first is liberation 'without limit' and the latter liberation 'with limit'.

The realization of the goddess in her most 'complete' form as the Full Moon, repleate with all its sixteen energies is the supreme deity. She is higher than the gods of the lower traditions and is the supreme form within her own tradition as Kujā herself. She is attained at the summit of the ladder of levels of liberation 'without limit' and so contains and fulfils all of them. Although here the fettered soul's wandering comes to an end (68/80). It is not the ultimate form of liberation. Although the soul is at the top of the ladder of states, he is still on it and so may descend down again. Moreover, this is just one aspect – the one that can be 'known' and so is in some subtle way 'objective' and can be taught and somehow described and imagined as the supreme goddess, who is in the supreme state of being. But although Kujā is worshipped and realised to be Parā, Supreme. Liberation 'with limit' from which there is fall is only attained by 'knowing nothing' on the Śāmbhava plane beyond all predication and relationships with any 'other' state or reality. This is the culmination (avadhi) and limit of all practice. This state is 'with limit', there is no further to go. This is the 'waveless' plane (61/95cd) of the 'pure bliss' (61/44cd-45) of Stillness which is the Supreme Void (68/70cd-1, 78-80). In this infinite Ocean of consciousness, perception and its object cease (CMSS 3/5cd-6ab quoted in note to 65/64-65) and, beyond the immanent plane of phenomenal being, all the waves of it differentiated energies are stilled. See note to 68/49-51ab.

42. The expression 'bindubheda' can mean types, categories, divisions of the Point or the 'splitting apart of the Point'.

43. See intro. vol. 1, p. 102-103.

44. Cf below 68/85cd-86ab.

45. See note to 57/28.

46. See note to 68/49-51ab.

47. See note to 68/67.

13. Table of the Types of Liberation, Tantras and Voids

Mata Tantras	Types of liberation (61cd-65)	Voids (76-80)
1) Picumata	Person	Person
2) Siddhayogeśvarī	Māyā	Māyā
3) Śivādūtī	Śuddha Vidyā	Īśvara
4) Vāmeśvarī	Īśvara	Sadāśiva
5) Sundarī	Sadāśiva	Śiva
6) Ratnasundarikā	Śiva	End of Sound
7) Mātṛ	Śakti	Vyāpinī
8) Rūpikā	Samanā	Samanā
9) Sārasvata	?	Bhairava
10) Mataṅgā	?	Bhairavī
11) Śikhottara	Klinnā	Vīrāvalī
12) Mālinī	Trikhaṇḍā	Kālikākrama
13) Khecarī	Kalpānta	Amarikānvaya
14) Ambā	Ādyānta	Kujānta
15) Bhairavī	42 syllable Vidyā	42 syllable Vidyā
16) Kulālikā	Six syllable Vidyā Ṣoḍaśī	Supreme Void

48. Another meaning of 'kujānte' is 'within Kujā'. But, if I have understood correctly, the Void within Kujā is the fourteenth level of emptiness.

49. Throughout the account in this chapter the 'sixteen divisions' are variously represented as is the 'seventeenth' beyond which is transcendental emptiness and liberation. There are sixteen Mata Tantras, sixteen planes of realisation from Earth to the Equal One, and sixteen types of liberation from the principle of the Person to the deity 'with parts' (sakala). See table above, note to 68/78-80.

50. Cf. above 68/73: If (a sphere of reality does not) culminate in the Void, it is not free (and independent) (asvatantra).

51. Cf. 68/137.

52. Ṣāṣṭatantra is a name of the Sāṁkhya school. But this does not appear to be the meaning here as the Sāṁkhya has already been mentioned above as a lower system.

53.

14. Table of Levels and Corresponding Schools

Level	School
Intellect	Buddhist
Three Qualities	Jaina
Fundamental Nature (pradhāna)	Vedika
Person	Saura ands Sāṁkhya
Māyā	Pāśupata
Pure Knowledge	Vaimala
Īśvara	Lākula Pāśupata
Śiva	Worshipers of the Nine Nityā
Five Causes
Bhairava
Eternal Bliss	Tāntrika votaries of Ṣāṣṭa Tantra
	Parāṣaṭka

54. Cf. 24/35.

55. The six relating to Parā are listed in these lines. These appear to be aspects of the teachings of the Kubjikā tradition. The 'Six Spokes' is possibly, the maṇḍala. Bhairava is the goddess's consort. The Vīrāvalī is the series of letters and the Kālikākula is a name of the tradition from which Kubjikā descends in the Primordial Descent of her scripture from Unstruck Sound.

56. The following passage (i.e. 68/116cd to 126ab) is similar to the Āgamasūtra on which the Ṭīkā comments.

57. See above 68/27-32ab and below 69/27cd-29ab.

58. These are the stages in the descent of the original scripture whose initial form at the supreme, unmanifest level is a pure undifferentiated potency which, as such, is not yet divided into the three Kramas. In the course of its transmission it is reduced in size to ultimately become the MBT. For an explanation of this passage, see intro. vol. 3, p. 71 ff..

59. Mentioned above in verse 68/29.

60. Cf. 68/33cd-34 and see note to 4/10cd-11ab.

61. Cf. above 68/44. The grids of letters are a standard group of sixteen. The Tantra that is beyond them is beyond the level of Speech where mantras are formed. It is essentially a transcendental scripture rooted in the supreme level of reality, that is, the Void of the Śāmbhava plane, which is the Neuter Absolute beyond characterizations as male or female, or, indeed, anything else. This is the First Sacred Seat. The first of all repostories of the scripture and its teachings. The colophons constantly remind us that it is from here that the 'primordial descent into the great sacrifice of the Churning Bhairava' has taken place. The great mantra of the original scripture is 'extracted' directly from there.

62. The YKh (1) presents a hierarchy of six systems (darśana) which are then followed by four Kaula āmnāyas, not mentioned in the KuKh. These are discussed in intro. vol. 2, p. 340 ff..

63. Cf. above 68/111.

64. The first group of the scriptures in this ascending hierarchy is a series of seven traditions, namely, Buddhist, Jaina, Vedic, Saura, Sāṁkhya, Vaiṣṇava, and Yogaśāstra. Then come the scriptures of the Pāśupatas, of which four kinds are listed, namely, Mahāvrata, Vimala, Lākula and Pāśupata. Above them are the Śaiva scriptures of 'many kinds'. These are probably the Siddhānta Āgamas. Above are the Bhairava Tantras. As Bhairava is the ninth Void beyond Samanā (78-80), we have reached the Tantras that belong to the sphere of Mind Beyond Mind and the Transmental. Above we are told that there are eight Bhairava Tantras (68/130), but only six are mentioned, although the number eight is reached by the addition of three homonyms of Svacchanda Bhairava (i.e. Bahurūpa, Aghorīśa and Vyādhibhakṣa). The others are Candragarbha and Vijñāna, followed by Tumburu who is the Bhairava of the Vāma Tantras and Amṛteśvara, the Bhairava of the Netratantra.

In this list of Tantras the Mālinīvijaya, which is said to have been 'created first of all' (68/126cd), marks, it seems, a point of entry into the higher, Kaula Tantras. The Mālinīmata is listed amongst the sixteen Mata Tantras (27-32ab) which, are all dedicated to goddesses (or to be more precise, Yoginīs) and may be considered to be Kaula. Note that the Kula of the Mālinīvijaya is here accurately identified as Trika. Beyond are the Kaula scriptures of the goddess Kubjikā of whom Klinnā is a common form (see intro. vol. 2, p. 226 ff.). While Klinnā is sometimes related to just one Krama out of the three, the Vīrāvalīkula, also called the Vīrāvalīkarma, is said to be related to the 'fourth lineage' which is common to all the other three (see 69/9cd-10ab). The Kālikākrama that comes next also comes after the eleventh Void associated with the Vīrāvalī as it does in the group of six associated with Parā (68/114cd-116ab).

65. Cf. above 68/91.

NOTES OF THE TRANSLATION OF CHAPTER SIXTY-NINE

1. Cf. above, 5/44.

2. Prabhava is the name of the first or thirty-fifth year in a sixty years' cycle of Jupiter.

3. Pramoda is the name of the fourth year in a sixty years' cycle of Jupiter.

4. Below Ṣaṣṭhanātha is associated, as usual, with Pūrṇagiri and the Dvāpara Age (69/19).

5. Nandirudra is also mentioned above in 67/8.

6. Cf. above, 68/114cd-116ab, 69/4-5. The Vīrāvalīkarma is also called Vīrāvalīkula.

7. Kṣaya is the name of the last year of the cycle of sixty years of the planet Jupiter.

8. YKh (2) (30/44cd): At the end of the Age all the three lineages are certainly in the Liṅga.

liṅga olyātrayaṁ [kh: -olyatrayaṁ] sarvaṁ yugānte nātra saṁśayaḥ ||

9. Concerning Kucandra as Kubjikā's consort and the etymology of his name, see above 7/34-35ab. According to 7/53 above, the goddess emerges out of him in the form of the Moon. She is the Transmental which is the next and last in the series of the energies of Sound. She is the will that is above the Equal One. Thus, although the goddess, as the will of the god, is commonly represented as emerging from him, here he is said to emerge from her. Moreover, here he is implictly said to be the male equivalent of the Transmental – the energy that is said to 'emerge from the Equal One'.

10. The name of the Siddha in Kāmarūpa is Mitranātha whose name is derived from the 'friendship' he enjoys with the goddess. See above 4/50.

11. YKh (2) (30/49ab): He resides in Kāmarūpa and gives worldly benefits and liberation to the twice-born.

kāmarūpe sthitaḥ [k: sthita; kh: (?)] so [kh: (?)] hi dvijānāṁ [k: dvijanāṁ] bhuktimuktidaḥ [k, kh: -da] |

12. Although all the MSs read 'guḍanāthaḥ' I have chosen the reading in YKh (2) as this is in consonance with 69/4 where it says that the Lord of this Age is Oḍḍīśa.

13. This is another name for the Oḍḍiyāna. See YKh notes p. 62.

14. Below (69/23cd) we were told that Kucandraśekhara descended onto the Island of the Moon. This, then, is the sacred seat of the Moon. By adding him to the five Siddhas, we get a set of six Siddhas and six corresponding seats. Kucandraśekhara is all five of the Siddhas, although he is also accompanied by them. Analogously, the sacred seat of the Moon is counted separately even though

15. Table of the Seats, Siddhas, Lineages and Ages

Sacred seat	Siddha	Alias of the Siddha	Lineage	Age
Kāmarūpa	Mitranātha	Śrīkaṇṭha	Mahāvṛddha	Kṛta
Jālandhara	Oḍunātha*	Purandara	Child	Tretā
Pūrṇagiri	Ṣaṣṭhanātha	Kumāreśa	Middle	Dvāpara
Oḍḍiyāna	Caryānātha	Nandirudra	Aged	Kali
Tisra	Mataṅgīśa	Piṅgala	Vīrāvalī	End of Kali
Candra	Kucandraśekhara	Navātman	Khecara	Beginningless

*Caryānātha is normally the Siddha of Jālandhara, just as one would expect Oḍunātha to be the Siddha of Oḍḍiyāna. However, the first version of this presentation confirms these names exactly for Oḍḍiyāna and reads Oḍḍīśa / Durvāsa for the Siddha in Jālandhara.

16. This is the lineage of Siddhas that has come from the sacred seat Tisra, also called Trisrota.

17. KuKh 69/24cd-25 = KKh 6/175-176ab. See intro. vol. 3, p. 297 ff..

18. This is the MBT, which is called the Śrīmata or Kulālikamata. See above 68/27-32ab where 16 Mata Tantras are listed and note. Also 68/116cd. See intro. vol. 3, p. 1.

19. Cf. above 68/37cd-38ab. The so-called YKh may be the Yogapāda of the Ādyakhaṇḍa. That section of the MBT is indeed sometimes referred to in the colophons as the Ādyakhaṇḍa. Concerning the four pādas of an Āgama, see intro. vol. 3, p. 95-96 and concerning the sections of the MBT, see ibid. 97 ff..

20. See note to 30/48cd-49ab for the meaning of this line.

Passages in the Kumārikākhaṇḍa traced in other sources

Well over half of the KuKh is found in other texts and other sections of the MBT. Most often, if not always, the KuKh is drawing from them. This is certainly the case with the KMT, TS, YKh (1) and (2) and the ṢSS; but possibly not the AS. The passages found in other texts signaled in the notes of the edition and elsewhere are all listed together here.

Chapter 1 This chapter is the Saṁvartāmaṇḍalasūtra, which is probably drawn from the ṢSS.[1] KuKh 1/1-5 = ṢSS 1/1-5. This and the following chapter are reproduced in Sa.mP (fl. 4b-6a).

Chapter 2 KuKh 2/8-10 = KrSūA 1/54-56; KuKh 2/20cd-21ab, KuKh 35/92cd-93ab = YKh (2) 15/5; KuKh 2/21cd-25 = ŚM 23/46-50ab.

Chapter 3 KuKh 3/20-24ab = AS 10/149-153ab.

Chapter 4 This chapter includes an expanded version of the Mālinīstava that is in chapter 2 of the KMT. The same version is also found in the SKh (chapter 21 folio 99a ff. of MS K). It is not possible to establish whether the SKh draws from the KuKh or vice versa. The KuKh presents the Stava in the context of its own re-working of the goddess's myth. In the SKh it is one of four hymns not framed by any substantial context.[2] The extended Mālinīstava also appears in chapter 28 of the AS (folio 115a ff). The passage ends at the equivalent of KuKh 4/44ab and is followed by the equivalent of KuKh 4/47ab.

The content of KuKh 11/73b-77 correspond to ŚM 10/82cd-83 although the wording differs. KuKh 11/77cd-79 = ŚM 10/83cd-84, 85cd-86ab. KuKh 11/65-79 = ŚM 10/76cd-86ab.

Chapter 12 KuKh 12/3 = ŚM 9/93; KuKh 12/22cd-42 = YKh (1) 50/1-20, KuKh 12/24-26ab = ŚM 9/110-112ab, KuKh 12/26cd = ŚM 9/105ab. These verses are not in the same serial order in the ŚM as they are in the KuKh. Also ŚM 10/106-109 are three extra verses not found in the KuKh and YKh (1). As most of the ŚM was probably not written in Koṅkoṇa, it precedes the MBT. If, so the ŚM is probably the original source of these lines.

Chapter 14 The verses of this chapter correspond to TS 15/1-132, KMT 25/29-155ab, ṢSS 49/52-144ab and KuKauM 7/85 ff., as noted in the table.

Also KuKh 14/1-6 = YKh (2) 19/1-6; KuKh 14/32cd-33ab = KuKh 16/3 and KuKh 42/31cd-32ab.

The KuKauM follows the ṢSS, not the KMT. It is unlikely that the KuKauM is the source of the ṢSS as the latter follows the KMT systematically for the entire length of the text. It seems that the redactor of the KuKauM chose the ṢSS as his source rather than the KMT. The redactor(s) of the KuKh was more creative. The KuKh follows the KMT more closely than the ṢSS, but is not exactly the same.

KuKh 14/7cd-20 and 14/26-28ab are not found in any of the other sources. After the equivalent of verse KuKh 14/21, the other sources have the same extra passage. This is TS 15/8-12, KMT 25/36-40, KuKauM 7/98cd-102 and ṢSS 49/65-69. Similarly, there is an extra section after 14/94ab that is KuKauM 7/145-152ab, KMT 25/109cd-116 and ṢSS 49/138-146. However, this extra section is missing in the TS and so is evidently an addition made to the KMT that has carried over to the the KuKauM and the ṢSS. Note that this passage is missing in the KuKh also. One wonders whether the redactor of the KuKh had both the KMT and the TS in front of him. The presence of an extra line after KuKh 14/97 found in all the sources except the KuKh and the TS is another indication that the redactor of the KuKh consciously followed the TS with regards to the structure of the text although the readings are closer to the KMT than the TS. It also possible that the redactor of the KuKh drew from a different version of the KMT that was closer to the TS.

The speaker in the KuKh is the goddess who replies to the questions of the god. In the KMT, as in the TS and these other Kubjikā sources, it is the other way around. Thus, the redactor has to alter all the female vocatives the god uses to address the goddess, to their male equivalents. In most cases, this entails small changes, but in others more substantial changes are required. The redactor does sometimes take the trouble to do this, but often simply changes the gender of a vocative that applies better to a female than a male, or the other way round as the case may be. Thus, for example, the vocative varārohe ('fair-hipped lady') does not work in the male equivalent – varāroha ('fair-hipped man). In some cases, however, one wonders whether the use of normally male vocatives to address the goddess, are not intentional. This is the case the vocative prabho, which normally means 'O lord', is used with reference to the goddess.

The text specifically tells us that the goddess is both female and male and yet, indeed, because, her deeper metaphysical identity is beyond gender.[3] Of course, the same considerations apply to the god as well[4] but although polarities are ultimately transcended, they are also essential and as such maintained. They not only account for the creation of the world and the entire cosmic process, they also make real transmission of true teachings possible. At times, the texts repeatedly assert, the god teaches the goddess and at other it is the reverse. In this case it is as literally true as possible. The same words (or almost so) that were uttered by the god in the KMT are spoken by the goddess in the KuKh.

Chapter 15

KuKh 15/1-9, 10cd-13ab, 14 = TS 15/130-142, 147. This passage is also found in the KMT, ṢSS and the KuKauM but there KuKh 15/6cd-7 is missing. KuKh 15/1-6ab, 8ab-9cd, 11ab-13cd, 14 = KMT 25/156ab-166ab, 170, ṢSS 50/35cd-46ab, 50 and KuKauM 7/214-224, 228cd-229ab.

[3] See intro. vol. p. 310 ff..

[4] Cf. comm. on TAA 3/66.

Here too the KuKh, despite modifications to the text, follows the TS more closely than the KMT. Either the redactor had the TS before him or drew from a version of the KMT that was closer to the TS. In these sources there is no break between chapters here. As in the previous chapter, the speakers are reversed.

The long section from the beginning of chapter 14 of the KuKh and ending with KuKh 15/13, deals with the Vow of Knowledge and related matters. It corresponds to KMT 25/29-171 which is chapter 14 (consisting of 148 verses) of the TS. Thus the first thirteen verses of this chapter (concerning Kaula consorts) concludes the previous chapter and so would be better placed there. Like chapters 11 and 12, here is another example of the clumsy division of chapters suggesting that it was done by a second party, not the redactor the text.

In this chapter we have an interesting example of how later doctrine is integrated into earlier one by the addition of the Vratasūtra that extends up to the end of chapter 15 (i.e. KuKh 15/15-44. Verse 15/14 concerning the ritual use of wine seems misplaced here). In this sūtra four Vows are outlined corresponding to the four transmissions typical of the Kubjikā teachings.

Chapter 16

This chapter is about the sacred seats. It opens with a passage on the practice of begging alms in the eight centres of Kula where the eight Mothers are located and worshipped. The bulk of this passage consists of two series of mantras dedicated to the Mothers. The first half (KuKh 16/1-15) is followed by the Sūtra of the Octad of Kula (KuKh 16/16-23), lists the mantras to the eight Mothers. The rest of the chapter is dedicated to the Hymn to the Sixty-four Sacred Seats. The first twenty-four of these seats correspond to a set in chapter 22 of the KMT from which the verses are drawn. The same is reproduced in chapter 34 the ṢSS and some parts in chapter six of the AS. The correspondences are as follows.

KuKh 16/3 = KuKh 14/32cd-3ab and 42/31cd-32ab; KuKh 16/16 ff = Sa.mP fl 9b-10a.

Parallel passages are found in the KRU, ŚM and Ṭ. They refer to the same 24 seats described in the KMT. Although not literal reproductions of the text, they present essentially the same material in their own way and context. The KRU presents the seats as the Sequence of Twenty-four of the Transmission of the Aged which is deposited on the body.

Chapter 17

KuKh 17	AS 22
2-6	2cd-7ab
8-9	12-13
10-11	14cd-16ab

The first fifteen odd verses that introduce the Santānasūtra are essentially the same in the KuKh and AS. These are a list of sixteen 'conventions' and a series of questions concerning them. The rest of the chapter is a response to these questions. Although the sixteen 'conventions' are the same in both texts, the explanations differ.

Chapter 26

Chapter 26, 38 and 42 start with versions of the Root Sūtra. The first verse of the Root Sūtra proper is basically the same in the three versions in KuKh and in the other sources, namely, the KrSūA and CMSS. Perhaps this sūtra originally consisted of just this one verse set in sragdharā.

[5] Here the KuKh follows the KMT not the ṢSS.

A comparison of the versions of the Root Sūtra and its expansions discloses a number of ways of developing a text creatively. One is a straight forward development of the text by insertion. We find a good example of this method in chapter 25 of the AS. There each of the four lines of the first verse of the Root Sūtra serves as the first line of four consecutive verses. Thus these lines can be easily identified and simply compared. In other cases, however, a line of the text is taken as a base to create another line of text. Although it is still recognizably derived from its source, it is a reworking of it rather than just a variant. Such changes may just relate to a word or two or practically the whole line.[6] The Sūtra describes the four seats in the goddess's triangle. If the Sūtra originally consisted of just this verse, the first of these versions was the original one as it refers to all four seats. The other two versions describe Kāmarūpa in the first line of the following verse.[7] A third way of expanding and developing the text is by working lines of the original text into what becomes essentially a running commentary.

[6] An example of the first case is the end of the first verse. In 26/3d it is kāmarūpaṁ tadagre. In 38/2d and 42/3d we find pūritaṁ yena viśvam.

[7] This reads: tasyāgre kāmarūpaṁ madanakalayutaṁ sarvasiddhyālayam 38/3a, 42/4a.

Chapter 37

The topic of chapter 37 is the Practice of the Rules (samayācāra) a Kaula should observe. The text of this chapter beginning with line 37/2cd is the same as KuKh 47/28 to the end of chapter 47 from which it has been removed in the edition, although the readings have been compared. The ṢSS lists the Rules the initiate should observe in chapter 41 which has no equivalent in the KMT. Many of them coincide in the KuKh and ṢSS. These are noted in the following table.

Chapter 41

This chapter corresponds to chapter 21 of the AS. Almost all the verses are found in the second half of chapter 1 of the TS but not in the order they appear in the KuKh. Moreover, there are occasional additions and omissions in the KuKh with respect to the TS and, to a lesser extent, the AS.

Chapter 46

With reference to the incorporation of chapter 43 of the ṢSS into the KuKh where it is chapter 46: In the ṢSS the speaker is the god. Here the speaker is the goddess. This reversal of the speaker with respect to the one in the original source when incorporated in our text is common. This is because the speaker here is almost always the goddess whereas in the earlier texts, it is usually the god. This is the case even when the Tantras are dominantly Śākta, even Kaula.

As the speaker in the ṢSS is the god, the female vocative mahākubje is an appropriate manner of calling the partner who is listening. However, the male equivalent - mahākubja, which we find in the KuKh, is not. Note, however, that Ratneśa, the second of the nine Siddhas, is referred to as Mahākubja (see KuKh 46/177). Again, in one instance (ibid. 46/57c), all the MSs read devi - 'O goddess' - even though the speaker is the goddess, who is addressing the god. These are two clear indications that this passage has been taken from another source.

This chapter is common to chapters 43 and 44 of the ṢSS. Here too, the reversal of the speakers has left traces in the KuKh that serve as evidence that it is not the original source which, barring the unlikely possibility that there is a third source, must therefore be the ṢSS.[9] The following verses of the ṢSS have been omitted in the KuKh: ṢSS 43/19cd-46ab, 43/50cd-52ab, 43/107cd-117ab, 43/120cd-192, 43/200-202, 207-210ab, 214-215, 44/1-2ab.

Tantric Sources Mentioned in the Kubjikā Corpus

Major Śaiva Tantras almost invariably refer to other Tantras. These references are generally to single Tantras or groups of them. Occasionally find solitary references to a Tantra as an original locus for a doctrine, yogic practice, ritual or mantra. Such references may be casual. For example, the god or the goddess who is uttering the Tantra refers to another one to say that what was hidden, that is, hard to understand or not mentioned, in that Tantra is now revealed. Sometimes lists are made of Tantras that are considered to be the best out of which the most excellent is, of course, the Tantra in which the list appears. Conversely, we also find lists of Tantras that should not be followed. They are analogous to lists of auspicious and inauspicious places from which teachers should or should not be chosen.

The presentation may be more systematic. For example, the deities identified with the six mantras that constitute Kubjikā's limbs (aṅga) are each associated with their specific Tantra. Similarly, Tantras and the schools they represent may be projected into the body of the deity to establish an ascending hierarchy that ranges from the feet to the highest extremity of the deity's body made of scriptures. This is beautifully represented in the Kubjikā tradition by identifying the goddess's Triangle in the End of the Twelve with the 'seat of knowledge' (vidyāpīṭha) where the goddess's scripture is kept and worshipped.

Sometimes we find lists of Tantras, some of which may be quite long, that serve to place the Tantra in which they appear in the context of a corpus of scriptures. They belong to just one school or several related to each other in the larger perspective of the entire Tantric corpus. I have explored some of these canons in a previous publication.[11] Another possibility are lists that group Tantras together that are considered to belong to a class of their own, without specific reference to particular traditions or canons. The Mata Tantras listed in chapter 68 of the KuKh are an example. We also find unstructured lists. One at the beginning of the KRU is an example. There the goddess simply questions the god concerning the 'essence' of a series Tantras she names.

Where we find references to single Tantras, these are in many cases actual texts. However, the lists are generally a frustrating mix of real and imaginary names or, indeed, in some cases entirely imaginary. This is especially true when the number of the Tantras listed is chosen to fit an ideal scheme. The remarkably extensive canon of the JY recorded in the first ṣaṭka is a good example of this phenomenon.[12] These lists were compiled with the aim of embedding the Tantra in which they appear in an extensive canon. The intention is not bibliographical.

[12] See Dyczkowski 1988: 107 ff..

Even when we find names of Tantras we know exist, they may have been ideal at the time a list was compiled. This is a remarkable phenomenon. It appears that Tantras were compiled that were given pre-existent names. We have seen that this is the case with our own MBT. But even though the use of such lists is clearly highly problematic most of them do contain some titles of Tantras that existed at the time of their compilation and therefore worth recording and examining.

55 Tantras are listed in a prose passage in chapter thirty of the KuKh. In chapter sixty-eight there is a list of sixteen Mata Tantras.[13] This is also found in the AS,[14] which continues with another 26 names. One wonders why the KuKh lists just 16 Tantras. Is it because this section, at least, predates, the AS whose redactor though it fit to expand the list? Although this is possible, it is perhaps more likely that the reverse is the case as the Ambāmata (the AS reads Avvāmata) is amongst them.

The references after some names are followed by a number in brackets. This number denotes the serial order in which that Tantra appears in the list in chapter thirty of the KuKh. These entries have been distinguished from others in this way as the list is long. Moreover, it seems to consist of mostly ideal names.

[13] Note here that although these are all Matas, the text stresses that they are Tantras.

[14] KuKh 68/27-30 = AS 28/44-47. See notes.

[15] The KuKh reads amvāmataṁ in place of avvāmataṁ of the AS.

[16] The MS reads: kāntyāyanīm

[17] The lines in which the Kālikāgama appears are:

He who is devoted to the Yoni of the virgin and intent on the Kālikāgama is consecrated here itself and awakens (others) to the Kālikāgama.

kumārīyonibhakto yaḥ [k, gh: kumārīyogibhakṣā ya; ṅ: kumārīyogibhaktā ya] kālikāgamatatparaḥ [k, ṅ: kārikāgamatatparā; gh: kārikāgamatatpara] |

Perhaps the Kālikāgama mentioned here is another name for the MBT. See intro. Vol. 3, p. 76 ff..

[18] Variant in KuKh 25/53c: Candrākhya

[19] The MS reads: khaṇḍograṁ

[21] There are five Wheels in the Śrīmata and six peak syllables in the Tripurārṇava: śrīmate pañca cakrāṇi ṣaṭkūṭaṁ tripurārṇave || ṢSS 20/19cd. Heilijgers-Seelen (1994: 262 fn 31) suggests that the Tripurārṇva mentioned here may be the Yonyārṇava mentioned in the ŚM (chapter 20) but this is not likely. It is not impossible however, that 'tripura' in this case is the goddess's Triangle which in one or two places is referred to in this way. For example:

*pīṭhaughaṁ [2: pīṭhe.adyaṁ] lokanāthaṁ ajatripuravaraṁ [gh: āja-; 2: tripurapuravaraṁ (kh: tri * * ? raṁ)] kiṅkareṇāpi yuktaṁ [ṅ: yuktaṁ; 2: uktam] YKh (1) 15/57c = YKh (2) 5/120c

[22] None of the verses quoted from the Tripurārṇavatantra in the BB can be traced in the printed edition of the Tripurārṇavatantra (see bibliography). In an appendix to the edition the editor has collected several other references from the Tripurārṇavatantra that are not found in the printed text. These references may either be part of another, possibly, earlier Tripurārṇavatantra. More likely, as the printed text is based on just one incomplete manuscript, they may well be part of the missing portion.

[23] The Ṭ quotes the following verse from the Triśikhā and then comments on it:
One should press the two index fingers with the two hands with effort. The seat of Mandara (is formed) by repeating the Brahmanāḍi twice.

> karābhyāñcaiva tarjanyau pīḍatet tu prayatnataḥ
> brahmanā.yo dvirabhyāsādāsanaṁ mandarasya tu ||

[24] This is a generic expression - KMT 7/4d - the Samayā Vidyā is considered to be the most excellent in the Devītantra.

[25] The Nityātantra is also known to the GS, but this seems to be different from the NSA insofar as the Nityā to which this Tantra refers to is not Śrīvidyā but Kāli:
nityātantrasamudbhūtā devyā dūtīsamudbhavā |
tena nityā samākhyātā kālikā nāma viśrutā || GS 14/194 (p. 153).
That the Nityātantra is not the same as the Vāmakeśvaratantra is confirmed because they are mentioned separately in a list of Tantras (ibid. p. 278). On this be the Nityātantra referred to in the TĀ (ref. TĀ v. XIa p. 51. In this reference Nityā is equated with śakti as Kula....) is this the Kālikātantra referred to in GS 10/207?

[26] A manuscript of a text with this name is deposited in the central library of Banaras Hindu University. It is MS no. C 4246, cat. no. 14/7675.

[27] Another name for the Brahmayāmala is Picumata. A typical colophon, such as that of chapter three reads: iti śrībrahmayāmale mahābhairave dvādaśasāhasrake picumate. Instead of 'mahābhairave' we also find 'mahābhairavatantre' (colphon of chapter 1) and 'mahābhairava-mūlatantre' (colophon of chapter 2).

[28] O lord of the gods, what has been taught in the Yāmala called Siddha is clear in the Kādibheda. Otherwise, it would run contrary to the scripture.

sūcitaṁ [gh: + yatra] yac ca [g: yatra] deveśa yāmale siddhasaṁjñake |
kādibhede sphuṭaṁ caiva anyathāa "āstravilomakṛt [ṅ: -kṛta] || YKh (1) 41/12 ||

[29] siddhayogeśvarījñānaṁ nirdiṣṭaṁ paramākṣaram | AS 8/146ab.

Bibliography

Bibliography

Preliminary editions of a number of texts have been made in order to make the edition and comprehension of the Kumārikākhaṇḍa possible. These include the major Tantras of the Kubjikā corpus and, for comparative purposes, major early Kālīkula Tantras, the Brahmayāmala and the Tantrasadbhāva. Unless otherwise specified the folio numbers in references are those of MS K of that text if there is more than one manuscript.
